Read the following passage and answer questions 1 through 7.

Summer Adventures

- 1 Ben and his best friend Eli jumped on their bicycles after school. As they rode down the sidewalk, they talked about their summer plans.
- 2 "One more week until summer vacation!" Ben yelled.
- 3 "I can't wait to hang out in the tree house and go to the swimming pool with you," Eli answered. "I sure hope the two weeks I have to spend with my cousin go by fast," he added.
- 4 Ben squeezed the brakes and came to a screeching halt. "I completely forgot you will be gone for two weeks," he said. Now, instead of feeling excited about the summer, Ben felt gloomy.
- 5 The last week of school went by quickly, and soon enough, Eli was at his cousin's house. Ben feared the next fourteen days would creep by slowly. He thought about all the adventures Eli and he had planned. Instead, Ben watched TV and read comic books. This was not the summer he had thought it would be.
- 6 When Ben's mother saw him sulking, she offered a suggestion. "Mrs. Chandler was telling me about an adventure camp that starts in two days. Her son Mark is signed up to go. Why don't you join too? I think you would have a good time, and you would get some fresh air."
- 7 Being outside did sound like a good idea. Also, Mark went to the same school as Ben. Although they did not know each other very well, at least Ben would see a familiar face at camp. Days later he was at the Winding River Adventure Day Camp. He spotted Mark and walked over to him.
- 8 "Hi. I was just looking at the list of activities to choose from," Mark said. "I think I'm going to try hiking, fishing, and canoeing."
- 9 Ben had no time to carefully consider his choices, but he decided that fishing would be a good activity to try first. So he and Mark walked over to the fishing group. They grabbed their gear and followed the leader to the pond. After the first lesson, Ben cast his line into the water and caught a small fish.
- 10 "You're a natural at this," the leader said.
- 11 Ben beamed. Maybe this summer won't be so bad after all, he thought.

12 Each day at camp brought a new adventure for the two boys. However, they enjoyed fishing the most, and both learned quickly.

13 "It looks like you made a new friend," Ben's mother said one day.

14 "Yeah, Mark has become a good friend," Ben said. Then he paused. "I hope Eli will like him too."

15 "I'm sure everything will work out fine," replied his mother.

16 Before Ben knew it, the two weeks had zoomed by, and Eli was home again.

17 "Did you have a good time with your cousin?" Ben asked his best friend.

18 "It was great," Eli began. "My cousin and I went camping. He has a small pond on his farm where we set up our tents. We really enjoyed spending time outside."

19 "That sounds fun!" Ben said. "I've been fishing at summer camp with a kid from school named Mark," Ben explained.

20 "Hey, I have an idea," Eli replied. "Maybe we can go to the lake this weekend. I'll ask my parents if they can take us, and we can invite Mark to go along."

21 Ben was relieved when Eli suggested the three boys go to the lake together. They may have a lot in common after all. One thing seemed to be certain: together they would have many exciting summer adventures!

Life in Ancient Egypt

- 1 Thousands of years ago, much of life in Egypt was shaped by its environment. People who lived in this area learned to adapt to the hot weather and their surroundings. These conditions determined how homes were built, how people dressed, and what foods people ate.

Mud Houses

- 2 The locations and designs of houses were determined by both the Nile River and the hot temperatures. Homes were usually built on high spots near the Nile River to keep them safe from rising waters. In addition, the houses were made of mud bricks. Mud kept the houses cool from the soaring temperatures. The insides of the houses were comfortable too because small windows would not allow much heat to come inside.
- 3 People spent a great deal of time on the flat rooftops of their houses. Roofs provided extra storage space and also a great place for family gatherings. During the summertime, it was common to sleep on the roofs, which were cooler than the insides of homes.

Clothing and Hair

- 4 Most ancient Egyptians spent much of their time outdoors. To stay cool in the hot sun, men and women often wore clothes called tunics. This type of clothing looked like a long robe and was made out of a thin, lightweight fabric. The white color of the tunics also helped reflect the hot sun.
- 5 Another way that men and women stayed cool was by keeping their hair very short or even shaving their heads. However, for special events, they wore wigs. The wigs also protected people's heads from the harsh sun.

Egyptian Diet

- 6 Different types of foods, such as grains, fruits, and vegetables, grew well in the hot climate. Grains were used in making breads, cakes, and desserts and became the main part of the daily diet. Fruits and vegetables, such as lettuce, beans, figs, grapes, and cucumbers, were also popular foods in Egypt. In addition, people often ate fish. The Nile River and the surrounding seas provided a variety of fish to the Egyptians and were an important part of their diet.

- 7 Many interesting facts have been discovered about ancient Egyptians. They adapted very well to the environment, and their culture became one of the greatest in history.
- 8 Read this sentence from paragraph 2.

Read the following passage and answer questions 25 through 30.

A First-Place Friend

- 1 One morning two monkey friends named Max and Sidney were swinging through the leafy jungle. They decided to race up an umbrella tree, and Max easily won the contest. When Sidney finally caught up, he felt a stab of jealousy.
- 2 "You're the winner," Sidney declared with a sigh.
- 3 "I've been practicing," Max admitted shyly.
- 4 Down below, Alligator floated in the river, watching the monkeys with hungry eyes. How can I catch one of them? Suddenly, Alligator had an idea.
- 5 "Monkeys!" Alligator shrieked. "You both climb well, but who can do the most somersaults? It's a much harder trick to spin around on the branches."
- 6 Sidney puffed out his chest and stood as tall as he could. "I can!" he announced in a determined voice. A second later, the two monkeys began spinning around like furry wheels. Sidney tumbled over three times, but Max did four somersaults.
- 7 "You won again," Sidney muttered, and his head drooped.
- 8 "I practiced my somersaults too," Max told him quietly.
- 9 Down below, Alligator crept closer. "You both somersault well, but who can walk across that long, skinny branch above me?" she challenged. "That is the hardest trick of all."
- 10 Max stared at the skinny branch and at Alligator's big jaws. Her sharp teeth made his heart pound. "That trick is too dangerous," Max replied.
- 11 "I'm not afraid to try!" Sidney bragged. His mind was set on winning this contest. This time he'd be the best!
- 12 Carefully, Sidney made his way through the tree branches and stepped onto the skinny branch like a tightrope walker. The branch bowed under his weight, but he used his tail as a safety rope and help on tightly.
- 13 Step by step, Sidney slowly made his way across the branch. He'd almost reached the end when a gust of wind shook him. Sidney's foot slipped, and he started to tumble down, bouncing off the branches.
- 14 "Help me!" cried Sidney, as Alligator opened her enormous jaws.

- 15 In a flash, Max jumped over and reached out to catch Sidney. A moment later, Alligator's jaws snapped shut, but she only caught a mouthful of air.
- 16 "Thank you," replied Sidney as he rested safely on a branch with Max. All at once, Sidney realized that Alligator wanted him to fall, and Sidney felt foolish. He'd been so busy trying to beat Max, he hadn't been careful.
- 17 "No more tricks," Sidney informed Alligator. "It is only your hungry stomach that likes our contests."
- 18 "No, no," argued Alligator. "I was just yawning. Why don't you see who can do the most cartwheels?" she suggested sweetly.
- 19 "I have a much better idea," replied Sidney. "We'll show you who can climb the highest."
- 20 "Yes!" laughed Max, and he shot into the treetop. Sidney followed behind him, and this time, Sidney didn't mind if Max took first place. In fact, he was truly glad he had a friend who was both speedy and smart!

25 Read paragraph 7.

"You won again," Sidney muttered, and his head drooped.

Which sentence tells why Sidney is acting this way?

- A Sidney plans to have another contest.
- B Sidney begins to fear for his safety.

Read the following passage and answer questions 35 through 40.

Popcorn, the Perfect Snack

- 1 Pop! Pop-pop! Yum! Fresh popcorn is one of the most popular foods when it comes to watching a movie or a ball game. Delicious and good for people's health, popcorn is inexpensive and easy to make. Popcorn may just be the perfect snack.
- 2 Not all corn pops. Corn kernels contain a tiny amount of water. When the kernel is heated, the water turns to steam. In regular corn, the steam escapes through the outside cover, or skin. In popcorn, the skin of each kernel is sealed. When popcorn kernels are heated, the steam that builds up inside is trapped. Pressure builds up until . . . pop! The kernel explodes into the fluffy white treat called popcorn.
- 3 Popcorn has been around for thousands of years. In fact, researchers have found popcorn that is more than 5,600 years old. Back then people popped the kernels by putting them on red-hot stones near a fire. Popcorn was not always eaten whole as it is now. Instead, people crushed the popcorn into a type of flour and then added water to make bread.
- 4 For centuries American Indians popped corn in clay containers on an open fire. At the first Thanksgiving dinner, American Indians shared this tasty treat with the Pilgrims who had arrived from Europe. The Pilgrims discovered that they loved popcorn. After these newcomers learned to make popcorn in cast-iron pots, they began to pour milk and sugar on it before eating it for breakfast. Some say it was the first breakfast cereal.
- 5 The first machines that were designed to pop corn were invented around 1885. These poppers heated the corn with steam. Later, these popcorn poppers were put into small wagons. The wagons could be pulled to different places. Street vendors sold popcorn at carnivals, parks, and state fairs. People could not get enough of it!
- 6 Soon movie theaters began selling popcorn too. This started the tradition of eating popcorn at the movies. At this time popcorn became more popular than ever. For a short time though, people began eating less popcorn. In the 1950s television was still very new. Many people stayed home to watch television instead of going to the movies. Few people owned popcorn poppers. Then microwave ovens were invented. Now popcorn is easy to make at home. Today Americans are eating more popcorn again—more than one billion pounds each year!

35 In paragraph 3, what does crushed mean?

- A ground
- B stirred
- C baked
- D shook
