Skunks

by Cynthia Sherwood

P-U! That might be what you think when you hear the word "skunk." But there is much more to this little creature than just its stinky smell when it sprays.

Skunks are mammals that live in many places in North America. All are black and white, but some have stripes and others have spots. Most are the size of a cat. Some live mainly in the country, while others live in cities. But you probably do not see skunks very often. They are "nocturnal," meaning they are active at night while you are asleep.

Skunks eat a variety of foods. Their main diet is insects, including underground bugs called "grubs" that are considered pests. So skunks can be helpful to have around.

You may not feel that way, though, if you ever get sprayed by a skunk. The spray is a thick, yellowish-green liquid that can travel fifteen feet! But skunks do not want to make you stinky. They are usually quite shy and only spray to keep their enemies away.

Skunks also warn you first. If you ever see one hiss, click its teeth, or stamp its front feet, run away fast! The skunk is getting ready to spray. And if it does, you know what that means—P-U!
