Alliteration

In this exercise you'll practice your alliteration skills. In an earlier lesson you used alliteration to describe the way an animal might feel. In this lesson you'll write new examples of alliteration that link to your own name.

Type a letter from your name on each of the five lines on the next page. Only use each letter one time. If you run out of letters from your first name, move on to your last name. For example, if your name were Sid Sawyer, you would type the following letters on the lines: S, I, D, A, W.

After you put a letter on each line, type a sentence using each letter. Each sentence should have at least three words that start with the letter from your name.

Examples:

Letter: S

Shea spied swans.

Letter: W

Wally watched walruses.
