■ AP Human Geography

- 2 Tri's instead of 1
- College level course
- High Reading level
- Time to commit to homework

- Go to collegeboard.com to read more about the course and determine if you're a good fit

Is AP Human Geography right for you?

About the course:
AP HuG is a rigorous two-semester course looking at the world around us. Students may take the AP test in May and those passing can walk away with college credit as a freshman.

Is it really that easy?
We're not going to lie, no. As teachers of this course, we attempt to bring college-level material and teach it to freshmen. That's a difficult task. Also, the national pass rate on the AP test is about 50%. Oh, and some colleges do not accept AP Test scores.

Successful AP HuG Students have:

- a desire to learn about the world around them
- a willingness to take a harder course and maybe a slightly lower grade than the grade level geography class
- strong reading and studying skills— we'll work on them, but having a good foundation helps
- plans to be a strong applicant to colleges and universities

If you have many, or even all of these, take the course

Let's Compare:

Grade Level Geography <ul style="list-style-type: none">• One trimester• This is an 8 unit course - each unit is typically 5-7 days long• Classes have a mix of all freshman students• Offers no honors credit• Students spend an average of 15 minutes/night on homework• Classes are designed solely around the MN state standards	AP Human Geography <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Two trimesters• This is a 7 unit course - each unit is typically 12-20 days. Units have more hands-on activities & projects• Classes are more academic-oriented• Offers honors credit; students can also earn college credit• Students spend an average of 30 minutes/night on homework• Classes are designed for the AP exam and follow College Board guidelines for preparing for the AP exam
