

Gina Bradbury M.A., P.T.
Physical Therapist, Licensed

I received my Bachelor of Science degree in Health Sciences and Master of Arts degree in Physical Therapy from Touro College in New York. I also have a Bachelor of Arts degree in Psychology from The University of Rhode Island. While there, I was a member of the swimming and diving team as a springboard diver.

I began my career as a physical therapist in 1995 at The Burke Rehabilitation Hospital in White Plains, NY. I worked there for five years and had the opportunity to work with many talented therapists.

I have worked in many healthcare settings with patients of all ages. I have also worked for the past seven years with Angelfish Therapy providing pediatric aquatic therapy.

I grew up in New York with a passion for gymnastics. I preferred to be upside down! That led to my fascination with the vestibular system and its impact on our gross motor abilities.

My husband and I moved to Newtown in 1997. We have three amazing children Amanda, Matthew and Julia. Some of my hobbies include exercising (when I have the time), gardening and decorating my home. My favorite activities are to watch my daughters dance and my son play baseball!

I love being a physical therapist because I enjoy watching the children I work with grow, gain new skills and become stronger. I like watching them use these new skills to participate with their peers in school and gain confidence while doing so.
