

Mystic River by Dennis Lehane

Review by Will Grey

Dennis Lehane's Mystic River is a book that I would recommend to anyone I meet. If you are a fan of mystery and drama, in my opinion, there is no better book. There is several reasons to read this book: dialogue, characters, etc. the story is very basic, but the action of the characters and the consequences that come after the conflict are heart pounding. And you will not believe the climax!

Ender's Game Series by Orson Scott Card

The Ender's Game Series is one of the best I've ever read. It's intriguing, well written, and quite entertaining.

Ubik by Phillip K. Dick

I recommend Ubik by Phillip K. Dick. It's a science fiction book about death and precogs, with a middle that will keep you on your toes and an ending you wouldn't expect.

Extremely Loud and Incredibly Close by Jonathan Safran Foer

In some way or another, 9/11 has affected every single young American. This book gives the reader a glimpse into one young boy's grieving process over the sudden loss of his day in 9/11. Through the use of color, pictures, and wit; Foer creates Ovear's "wise-beyond-his years" character that you can't help but love.

Percy Jackson and the Olympians by Rick Riordan

It's a fast paced series and is a quick read. It is deep in Greek mythology but with a modern twist.

The Count of Monte Cristo by Alexandre Dumas

It always keep you thinking. It has lots of character relationships like love, betrayal, fighting, and revenge all combined.

A Thousand Splendid Suns by Khaled Hosseini

Review by Melissa Tjandra

This book will make readers appreciate their lives after learning about the Middle East culture/violence/chaos.

The Book Thief by Markus Zusak

Review by Melissa Tjandra

This fast paced book will enlighten many regarding how World War II affected the people who were alive at the time, Jews or non-Jews.

War of the Worlds by H.G. Wells

It's classic, it's readable, it's artful, and it's about robot aliens destroying the Earth. Enough said.

A Midsummer Night's Dream by William Shakespeare

Yes, it's Shakespeare, and yes it's written in Shakespearean rhyme, contains iambic pentameter and is in play format. But it doesn't make it any less of a funny and enjoyable read.

The Road by Cormac McCarthy

Thought provoking, gripping, entertaining, excellent setting in post-apocalyptic U.S.

Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy Series by Douglas Adams

By far, the funniest thing I've ever read. There was not a page in the whole volume where I was not laughing aloud. However, deeper than humor, it also has interesting comments to make on the nature of, well, everything.

East of Eden by John Steinbeck

It is a great book because it really hits home. Relating characters to the Bible and keeping the book interesting all the way through.

The Bourne Identity by Robert Ludlum

The book is 100% action packed and tells a wild believable story. This book engages readers with the adventures that the characters are on.

The Five People You Meet in Heaven by Mitch Albom

Review by Camille Kovach

Although this is not a classic, the novel still is very profound. It's a story that makes the reader examine the purpose of individual life and the nature of humanity.
