69. Marburg Colloquy

1529 - Landgrave Philip of Hesse hoped to unite Swiss and German Protestants in a mutual defense pact by inviting both Zwingli and Luther to his castle in October. His efforts were spoiled by Zwingli and Luther's disagreement on Christ's presence within the Eucharist. Zwingli believed it to be purely a symbolic act--commemorating the last supper and Christ's sacrifice for mankind. Luther, on the other hand, believed there was a spiritual presence in the bread and wine at the time of communion. Both Protestant leaders left the meeting feeling distrust for the other, which splinters and divides the Protestant group into several divisions.

A revised edition was imposed with the Second Act of Uniformity, along with a 42-article confession of faith by Cranmer, that helped establish a moderate Protestant doctrine in England.
