Generally, there are two types of visual artists – fine artists and graphic artists. Graphic artists provide their work for commercial clients such as major corporations, retail stores, advertising and publishing firms. Fine artists provide their work for art galleries, museums, and in homes and businesses. They usually work independently and many times will specialize in painting, sculpting or printmaking. Students who select this field should consider taking additional coursework in a career-related pathway such as Graphic Design or Web and Digital Communications.
