What if I already have a google account with my school e-mail?

The next time you sign in to a google product, you'll be asked to change your account. For example, if John Smith (jsmith@paulding.k12.ga.us) has an account that he set up personally, he would see these options when he signs into a google product:

- Change to an account with a new Gmail address (jsmith@gmail.com or another available Gmail name).
- Change to an account with a different email address that does not currently have a google account tied to it (uses his jsmith@yahoo.com address).
- Sign in with a temporary username Google provides (jsmith%paulding.k12.ga.us@gtempaccount.com).

All conflicting accounts must be resolved. If you choose the last option, your account is automatically renamed to the temporary name that Google provides. You are also prompted with these same options at sign-in time, until deciding on and selecting a permanent solution. In all cases, the data in your personal account remains safe and accessible to you.
