

Producers and the Director

Film Making
Last Revised 2016

Film Making

Last Revised 2016

What is a producer? Can you name a few responsibilities they may have?

Film Producer/Movie Producer

Someone who selects a screenplay, initiating the process of film-making

Executive Producer is normally reserved for a producer with a financial interest in the production.

Oversees the whole process including co-coordinating, supervising and controlling matters such as fund-raising, hiring key personnel such as the film director or other producers involved on production, and arrange for distribution.

Film Producer/Movie Producer

The producer is involved throughout all phases of the film-making process from development to completion of a project.

In the first half of the 20th century, the producer also tended to wield ultimate creative control on a film project.

Changes in movie and film distribution and marketing the 1970s and '80s gave rise to the contemporary phenomenon of the Hollywood blockbuster, which has tended to bring power back into the hands of the producer. While marketing and advertising for films accentuates the role of the director, apart from a few well-known film-makers, it is usually the producer who has the greatest degree of control in the American film industry

Executive Producer

The Executive Producer is the Producer who is not involved in any technical aspects of the film making or music process, but who is still responsible for the overall production

Typically an executive producer handles business and legal issues

Line Producer

A key member of the production team for a motion picture

Typically, a line producer manages the budget of a motion picture.

Alternatively, or in addition, they may manage the day to day physical aspects of the film production

Line producers usually do not act as part of the creative team for a picture.

Because line producers work on location, they don't work on more than one film at a time

A line producer may also hire key members of the crew, negotiate deals with vendors, and is considered the head of production on the set

Film Director

Responsible for overseeing creative aspects of a film under the film producer

They often develop the vision for a film and carry the vision out, deciding how the film should look

They are responsible for turning the script into a sequences of shots

They also direct what tone it should have and what an audience should gain from the cinematic experience

Directing a film is a kind of storytelling

Film Director

Film directors are responsible for deciding camera angles, lens effects, lighting, and set design, and will often take part in hiring key crew members

They coordinate the actors' moves and also may be involved in the writing, financing, and editing of a film

Were your assumptions about producers correct?

Let's Discuss...

If you had to choose to be one of these type of producers, which type would you be? Why?

What, in your opinion, is the most important type of producer?

When thinking of film making, do we need a producer? Why or why not?