

Name:

Avoiding Plagiarism Practice

DIRECTIONS | Read each piece of text. Then appropriately cite it with a direct quote and paraphrase. Make sure not to patchwork paraphrases.

Original Quoted Text	Framed Direct Quote (opening, quote, author)	Paraphrase (reword (synonym), reorder, rephrase)
From NASA Hubble’s capabilities have grown immensely in its over 30 years of operation. This is because new, cutting-edge scientific instruments have been added to the telescope over the course of five astronaut servicing missions.
From Britannica by Amy Tikkanen As it prepared to embark on its maiden voyage, the Titanic was one of the largest and most opulent ships in the world.

Original Quoted Text	Framed Direct Quote (opening, quote, author)	Paraphrase (reword (synonym), reorder, rephrase)
From MIT by Zach Winn As a child, Deborah Theobald wanted to be an astronaut. The desire led her to MIT, which had one of the few aerospace engineering programs for undergraduates.
From Science News Explores by Meghan Rosen Super-small structures on polar bears' paw pads offer extra friction. They work sort of like the rubbery nubs on the bottom of baby socks. That extra grip could keep polar bears from slipping on snow.
From CNN by Sophia Saifi A nationwide power outage in Pakistan left nearly 220 million people without electricity on Monday, threatening to cause havoc in the South Asian nation already grappling with fuel shortages in the winter months.		