

90 Criminal Justice Jobs

List of Criminal Justice Jobs

1. Anti-Money Laundering Operations Analyst

Ethical, detailed, and astute, an anti-money laundering agent works within a financial institution to ensure upper management and all employees adhere to FSA (Financial Services Authority) guidelines. They minimize the opportunity for terrorist financing or money laundering. An anti-money laundering operations analyst train staff members and explain regulations. They may also oversee a larger team and lead them in evaluation and monitoring of marketing and sales activity.

Anti-money laundering operations analyst educational requirements: They typically need a Bachelor's degree in Criminal Justice, Fraud Prevention, or Homeland Security.

Average 2018 anti-money laundering operations analyst salary: $51,155

2. ATF Agent

An ATF (Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives) agent or officer is an adventurous person willing to take on huge responsibilities and dangerous missions. When it comes to uncovering illegal activities which break federal regulations surrounding alcohol, tobacco or firearms, the ATF agent is at the core of activities. He may obtain a warrant or actually inspect locations for evidence. An ATF agent creates concise criminal investigative case reports. He is comfortable working irregular hours and engaging in activities which may involve risky situations.

ATF educational requirements: A four year bachelor's degree in any field completes the degree requirements for this position. In addition, at least a bachelor's degree and one year of specialized work experience equivalent to the FV-G level is key.

Average 2018 ATF agent salary: $35,000

3. Bailiff

Order in the court! A bailiff maintains the orderly proceedings of a courtroom. The position has many facets. Bailiffs are in charge of keeping jury members isolated from the public during high profile trials. A bailiff may also escort defendants to and from the court. In addition, the orderly proceedings under the bailiff's watch includes maintaining a supply of needed materials in the court such as reports and schedules. This position requires excellent organizational skills along with an ability to deal with a wide range of personality types.

Bailiff educational requirements: They need at least a high school diploma. Some positions may require formal training. Some positions may require a bachelor's degree.

Average 2018 bailiff salary: $38,972

4. Background Screening Analyst

The job includes working behind the scenes of a hiring process. A background screening analyst ensures any interviewed job candidate has a clear history when it comes to criminal activity. They make investigative phone calls regarding the integrity of the job candidate. Once a candidate submits their paperwork, a background screening agent evaluates and compiles an accurate portrait.

A background screening agent may appear in court hearings if needed as an expert in evaluating employee behaviors. A background screening agent is a detailed individual who is able to use critical thinking skills to make trusted evaluations of individuals considered for employment.

Background screening agent educational requirements: A background screening agents should earn a bachelor's degree in criminal justice or business.

Average 2018 background screening agent salary: $60,243

5. Banking Financial Services Card Fraud Specialist

Is your credit card information safe when you purchase a product over the Internet? If a company asks for your card number, and your information remains safe, thank the banking financial services card fraud specialist. A banking financial services card fraud specialist stays current in the latest technologies associated with making customer purchases safe and efficient. They often lead a team which finds and interrupts any odd or fraudulent patterns surrounding customer accounts.

A banking financial card fraud specialist may provide recommendations for upgrading or improving the current system a company uses to manage and secure customer information. A banking financial services fraud specialist needs a good sense for detail and an understanding of the latest internet banking procedures.

Banking financial services card fraud specialist educational requirements: Some employers may prefer a bachelor's degree in criminal justice, statistics or in another relevant area.

Average 2018 banking financial services card fraud specialist salary: $58,567

6. Border Patrol Agent

Vigilance and physical activity characterize a border patrol agent's day. Dedicated to keeping borders safe from terrorists and illegal aliens, a border patrol agent oversees borders in a variety of ways. He may ride a horse, a bicycle, or even drive a boat. Many border patrol agents work on foot, as well. At times, a border patrol agent may also need to become familiar with devices designed to track illegal entry into the United States.

Border patrol agents need the ability to stay in remote areas. In addition, they must feel comfortable screening strangers while wearing a firearm. A keen sense of bravery and ability to work long, arduous hours are qualities associated with a person who lives this very unique lifestyle.

Border patrol educational requirements: A four-year college degree can substitute for work experience for the GL-5 level.

Average 2018 border patrol agent salary: $58,673

7. Classification Officer

Where does a petty thief spend his allotted prison sentence? In what part of the prison does a drug dealer serve his time? A classification officer is the person who makes these determinations. A classification officer receives training in psychology and uses his understanding of human nature when interviewing prison inmates. He reviews the prisoner's records and history along with making personal assessments.

A classification officer's goal is to place the prisoner in the most independent setting possible. This great responsibility requires the classification officer to have an excellent sense of character and an ability to review and understand previous records and history to make sensible judgment calls.

Classification officer educational requirements: A classification officer often has an associate degree in psychology, guidance and counseling, penology, sociology, social work and/or criminology. In addition, the job often requires two years of experience in a correctional setting.

Average 2018 classification officer salary: $57,471

8. Computer Forensic Specialist

Digital evidence is at the center of many criminal investigations. A computer forensic specialist has the ability to locate and trace what types of activities have taken place on a laptop computer, PDA, gaming device etc. A computer forensic specialist may interview suspects or present evidence of foul play in courtroom settings.

A computer forensic specialist job is an excellent fit for a person who not only loves sleuthing and computers but also for a person who is able to interact with law enforcement to create reports or break down important results found during interrogatory interactions.

Computer forensics educational requirements: Some employers prefer applicants who have at least a bachelor's degree in computer forensics or in a similar area.

Average 2018 computer forensic specialist salary: $70,035

9. Conservation Officer

A love of nature mixed with an appreciation for law enforcement converge in this vocation. A conservation officer may work to ensure hunting and fishing areas have no poachers. He may also patrol park areas enforcing established rules surrounding wildlife protection or land use. Conservation officers maintain safety for visitors and the natural inhabitants. An ability to communicate effectively with strangers while firmly enforcing regulations can make for a successful conservation officer career.

Conservation officer educational requirements: A conservation officer may need an associate degree. Many agencies also require a bachelor's degree in criminal justice, environmental sciences, or biology.

Average 2018 conservation officer salary: $41,398

10. Correctional Services Specialist

This position requires a person to believe in the human ability to start again. A correctional services specialist assists people who served prison sentences reintegrate into society. He works as a liaison between the justice department and social services and creates a detailed plan of action. A correctional services specialist reviews a former prisoner's history, drug abuse or anger management issues and other life experiences.

Correctional services specialists work with support groups and parole boards in creating the best scenario introducing a prisoner back into society and the workforce. This is an emotionally challenging job which has potential for great reward as well as great disappointment.

Correctional services specialist educational requirements: A Bachelor's degree in any field in behavioral sciences or criminal justice.

Average 2018 correctional services specialist salary: $45,280

11. Correctional Officer

Demanding and often dangerous, the role of a correctional officer puts a person in charge of inmates in a prison facility or detention center. Correctional officers keep order and safety at a maximum level in these confines. They must be on alert for the potential of violence. When inmates have visitors, the correctional officers are on constant alert for the illegal exchange of weapons and drugs.

Correctional officers must keep detailed records of all visitors and activities. They're responsible for any escapes or violent outbursts. A correctional officer must remain neutral and refrain from showing favoritism. A detail oriented personality with an ability to sustain constant vigilance is well suited for this position.

Correctional officer educational requirements: A correctional officer should have a high school diploma or a GED. Many employers prefer an associate degree or a bachelor's degree. For a federal corrections job, corrections officers must have at least a bachelor's degree and three years of work experience in a related field such as supervision or counseling.

Corrections-classification interviewer educational requirements: Corrections classification officers must have a high school diploma. The U.S. Federal Bureau of Prisons requires a bachelor's degree for entry-level correctional positions and up to three years of work experience.

Average 2018 correctional officer salary: $34,964

12. Crime Analyst

Taking action based on probabilities and predictions sits at the heart of a crime analyst's daily work. A crime analyst works to predict when a crime will occur based on the available data. Her expertise with computer systems, which play out statistical information, along with a strong understanding of criminal psychology make a crime analyst an important member of a law enforcement agency.

A crime analyst may work not only to predict an event but also to recommend what supplies teams need. This position requires excellent critical thinking skills as well as good communication and organizational skills.

Crime analyst educational requirements: A crime analyst should have a bachelor's degree with major coursework completed in administration of justice, criminal Justice, criminology, statistical analysis, psychology, or sociology.

Average 2018 crime analyst salary: $47,087

13. Crime Lab Analyst

This is one of the more erudite criminal justice jobs available. Crime lab analysts embrace the sciences and employ the knowledge in a forensics laboratory. Crime lab analysts analyze information delicately lifted from crime scenes in order to prove people accused of a crime as guilty or innocent. A crime lab analyst produces hard evidence based on an understanding of DNA or molecular biology.

Crime lab analysts may testify in court or to produce reports which single out scientific results pointing to or away from a suspect.

Crime lab analyst educational requirements: Crime laboratory analysts generally have a bachelor's degree in forensic science, criminology, criminal justice, or physical sciences. Many state and federal crime labs, however, require a master's degree or a doctorate.

Average 2018 crime lab analyst salary: $51,729

14. Crime Prevention Specialist

"An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." This old adage is perfectly suited for the crime prevention specialist. They communicate with merchants or residents of a community in order to set up strategies to offset crime or note precursors to criminal activity. They may make recommendations about crime preparedness or security.

Crime prevention specialists may make public service announcements or create a community or neighborhood watch. A crime prevention specialist enjoys working with others as well as creating presentations to help communities stay safe.

Crime prevention specialist educational requirements: A crime prevention specialist may need a two-year or four-year degree in criminal justice, criminology, sociology, police science or in a related field.

Average 2018 crime prevention specialist salary: $46,000

15. Crime Scene Supervisor

A crime scene supervisor not only collects the evidence at a crime scene, he also oversees units of crime scene technicians who work for him. A crime scene supervisor knows all the ins and outs of collecting evidence at the scene of a crime. They know the procedures for lifting fingerprints or taking photographs of blood splatters for analysis. In addition, they're responsible for the overall accuracy and reporting of the teams they supervise.

At times, crime scene supervisors testify before a jury or write an expanded analysis of the findings made by their teams. They work odd hours and within settings where violent actions have occurred. Excellent analytical and communication skills are a must along with an ability to follow protocols to the exact letter.

Crime scene supervisor educational requirements: The job often requires a bachelor's degree in chemistry, biology, forensic science, or in a closely related field. Some employers choose candidates who have a master's degrees in one of these fields, as well as an advanced training background, which often includes at least four to six years of crime scene investigation job experience.

Average 2018 crime scene supervisor salary: $86,724

Featured Schools

16. Crime Scene Technician

This is not a job for the weak hearted. A crime scene technician is often one of the first to arrive at the scene of a crime. He carefully documents what he discovers at the scene. Crime scene technicians need skills using a camera and they need to know the proper procedures in collecting specimens. These specimen collections include gathering fingerprints, fluid collection, hair samples, etc. They need to carefully collect all the evidence. Crime scene technicians keep custody of all evidence and secure it for the crime lab.

Crime scene technicians need to withstand crime scenes where violent crimes have taken place.

Crime scene technician educational requirements: A crime scene technician typically needs at least an associate degree in law enforcement, police science, or an associate degree in criminal justice. A bachelor's degree may provide an edge on the competition.

Average 2018 crime scene technician salary: $34,070

17. Crime Victims Service Coordinator

When victims of a crime need support, the police department calls in the crime victims service coordinator. He provides support and intervention in crimes of domestic violence, sexual assault, and death. Not only does a crime victim service coordinator arrange for help through finding those in need psychological help or support groups, a crime victims service coordinator also offers emotional support along with scheduling appointments for victims.

Crime victims specialists need a thorough understanding of crisis support. They work as a liaison between families and produce clear reports on the actions taken and progress made. They need a deep and sensitive understudying of how interventions and support groups work.

Crime victims service coordinator educational requirements: Some employers may prefer a bachelor's degree in criminal justice, social work, psychology, sociology, or a related field.

Average 2018 crime victims service coordinator salary: $34,388

18. Criminal Justice Policy Advisor

A criminal policy advisor works to assess and advise peers on the criminal justice policies at a city, state or federal level. They may work with senior officials in reducing crime in areas such as human trafficking or domestic violence. This involves assessing old programs or implementing new programs to satisfy the needs of a community. They provide recommendations through writing proposals and reports.

Criminal justice policy advisors need excellent oral and written skills along with an ability to see how systems function.

Criminal justice policy advisor educational requirements: Some employers prefer a bachelor's degree in business, public administration, organizational development, finance, criminal justice, or a related field.

Average 2018 criminal justice policy advisor salary: $61,452

19. Criminal Investigator

If watching a good detective show has you saying, "I can do that," then perhaps you should look into becoming a criminal investigator. Criminal investigators work at city, state, and federal levels. A criminal investigator tracks, finds, and incarcerates criminals through the analysis of interviews and crime scene clues. Some criminal investigators specialize in a particular sort of crime such as homicide or burglary.

This position is often associated with danger and requires an ability to confront dangerous individuals. A crime scene investigator needs excellent analytical and communications skills. He must be an excellent record keeper. Criminal investigators might work long and odd hours.

Criminal investigator educational requirements: A criminal investigator should have at least a high school diploma or equivalent. However, earning an associate or a bachelor's degree, in criminal investigations or in criminal justice increases the opportunity for employment in this area. Courses centered on crime scene investigation, forensics, psychology, and sociology area also helpful in acquiring positions with federal agencies.

Average 2018 criminal investigator salary: $58,433

20. Criminal Law Paralegal

A criminal law paralegal, a highly organized person, assists an attorney in building cases and preparing paperwork. This position also requires interviewing clients, making background searches, and preparing trial exhibits. A criminal law paralegal must come prepared with a deep understanding of criminal law on the federal and state levels. Criminal law paralegals have a great deal of responsibilities and focused work.

Criminal law paralegals educational requirements: Generally criminal law paralegals must have a two-year or a four-year degree in criminal justice or paralegal training with a criminal law specialization. However, according to the National Federation of Paralegals, an increasing number of organizations require candidates have a minimum of a bachelor's degree. The organization advises prospective criminal law paralegals to opt for a bachelor's degree program instead of a two-year degree.

Average 2018 Criminal law paralegal salary: $46,467

21. Criminal Profiler

A criminal profiler enjoys filling in the missing details. She is the person a police department calls to help them figure out the perpetrator of a crime or how a crime took place. A criminal profiler has the skills which can break down basic evidence to produce a portrait or psychological profile of a perpetrator and the method of committing a crime.

Criminal profilers may conduct interviews with family members or explore evidence collected by the police department. This position requires the ability to solve complex problems while working with a wide variety of teams.

Criminal profiler educational requirements: A criminal profiler may earn a degree in criminal justice or in psychology. Some criminal profilers have a master's degree in forensic psychology.

Average 2018 criminal profiler salary: $62,888

22. Criminal Research Specialist

Being a criminal research specialist sits somewhere between being an investigator and a border patrol agent. A criminal research specialist often works with Homeland Security to establish safeguards when it comes to national borders. This position requires planning investigative strategies which intercept the illegal importation of weapons or drugs into the United States or the illegal exportation of technology or human trafficking.

A criminal research specialist must have a comprehensive understanding of how to foresee and foil such activities. He must know how to communicate and coordinate the efforts of his team. Excellent critical thinking and organizational skills are a must for criminal research specialists.

Criminal research specialist educational requirements: Some employers may require a bachelor's degree, but some specific jobs also require a master's degree.

Average 2018 criminal research specialist salary: $49,930

23. Criminalist

A criminalist relies on scientific training, not psychic powers, to solve the mystery of a crime. A criminalist may claim a number of different science backgrounds ranging from degrees in forensics to chemistry or biology. A criminalist specializes in knowing how to interpret very special clues related to DNA samples or trace clues left after a firearm has been discharged. Once a criminalist has assessed and noted the clues left at a crime scene, she then pieces together the evidence and makes a report.

Criminalists may testify about their findings in a court trial. This may include educating the jury. A criminalist needs good communication and writing skills.

Criminalist educational requirements: A criminalist should aim for a bachelor's degree in one of the physical, biological, or forensic sciences in conjunction with credit hours of chemistry, biology, or math. A bachelor's degree in criminology, criminal justice, or a related field may also be beneficial. Some criminalist positions require a master's degree.

Average 2018 criminalist salary: $59,926

24. Criminologist

Although this term sounds a great deal like “criminalist,” a criminologist has a decidedly different focus. A criminologist uses his understanding of psychology and human nature in combination with a knowledge of demographics and crime rates to untangle the root causes of criminal behavior. A criminologist works to either solve the reasons behind why a crime may have been committed or looks ahead to predict when the next crime will be committed in a series. He may also work in the field of crime prevention.

Criminologists need the ability to keep careful records and work with detailed information.

Criminologist educational requirements: Entry-level criminologists usually hold a bachelor's degree in criminology, sociology or psychology; however, many federal and private industry employers prefer criminologists hold at least a master's degree in behavioral science or a closely related field of study.

Average 2018 criminologist salary: $43,487

As the job title implies, a counter-terrorism analyst is an expert in evaluating information which uncovers terrorist activities threatening the United States. A counter-terrorist analyst often speaks multiple languages and is also well versed in international affairs and history. They have most likely studied the cultural and anthropological history of those groups seeking to harm the United States and may predict their responses to current U.S. policies.

Their understanding of surveillance data presents the U.S. government with excellent tools to uncover pockets of developing terrorist activities. A counter-terrorism analyst presents complex ideas in a clear and organized fashion. They must have excellent logical skills and stay current on international affairs.

Counter-terrorism analyst educational requirements: The CIA requires counter-terrorism analysts have a bachelor's or master's degree in national security studies, international affairs, or related subjects, such as political science with an emphasis on global politics and national security. These degrees preferably have a strong focus on particular regions of the world, such as the Middle East or South Asia. On the other hand, the FBI requires its counter-terrorism and intelligence analysts have a graduate degree in such fields as international relations, sociology, psychology, political science, public policy, Middle Eastern languages or regional studies, and especially Middle Eastern affairs. Individuals with law degrees or graduate degrees in business also are eligible for employment as counter-terrorism analysts.

Average 2018 counterterrorism analyst salary: $56,000

26. Court Reporter

A court reporter is potentially the proverbial “fly on the wall” of a heated or dramatic court proceeding. A court reporter uses a stenographic machine to quietly transcribe the events of a trial. They concentrate on capturing all words correctly while typing with great efficiency without distraction.

Court reporters must consistently appear on time and work with great focus for long periods of time before filing the transcriptions. Additional responsibilities include reading the transcripts back during a trial, maintaining the court calendar, answering phones, or assisting jury members.

Court reporter educational requirements: A court reporter needs a minimum certification as a registered professional reporter. Some states require licensure and may require court stenographers to serve as a notary public.

Average 2018 court reporter salary: $49,194

27. Customs Border and Protection Officer

This hands-on job requires customs border and protection officer to inspect and interview individuals and inspect items crossing the U.S. border. They must be in good physical condition and must also be comfortable stopping suspicious individuals for questioning. Key qualities of a competent customs border and protection officer include having good judgement and a keen eye for questionable or suspicious activities or appearances. They must also know the rules and regulations which control what items people may or may not take into or out of the United States.

Customs border and protection officer educational requirements: This job may require a relevant degree such as a bachelor's degree in criminal justice, international affairs, or law enforcement. While not required, a degree may enable individuals to obtain a higher level job. Upon completion of a degree, individuals can apply for a customs agent position through the Department of Homeland Security.

Average 2018 customs border and protection officer salary: $91,000

28. Customs Import Specialist

Do you have a mind for sorting and classifying? Do you enjoy the idea of sizing up a shipment's worth? A customs import specialist knows how to evaluate the worth of goods imported into the United States. This very dynamic job requires not only an understanding of appraisal procedures, it also puts the customs import specialist in charge of determining what items may or may not enter the U.S. borders. In some circumstances, a customs import specialist may even be involved in criminal investigations which have international players.

A customs import specialist job is perfect for someone with an intellectual interest in trade rules and regulations. The job is also best suited for organized people with strong analytical abilities.

Customs import specialist educational requirements: A degree in accounting, business management, or economics may place a person at an advantage in the application process. An MBA, master's, or JD, might help obtain a job in this field.

Average 2018 Customs Import Specialist salary: $45,046

29. Customs Inspector

A customs inspector works with Homeland Security and law enforcement agencies to ensure people and items crossing the borders of the U.S. do not pose any threats. They're able to notice behaviors and telltale signs of people who smuggle in illegal drugs or weapons. In some cases, a customs inspector receives training to work with a canine partner to complete the tasks at hand. A customs inspector should be comfortable interviewing strangers and acting on sound assessments of suspicious activities.

Customs inspector educational requirements: Customs inspector educational requirements: Typically, customs inspectors must at least have a high school diploma or a GED with relevant work experience; however, some employers may require a bachelor's degree in an applicable field. A law enforcement associate degree or a bachelors in criminal justice, police science, or a related field might help individuals obtain a job.

Average 2018 customs inspector salary: $62,252

30. Deportation Officer

This is not a job for the weak-hearted. A deportation officer identifies and at times physically subdues a person suspected of being an illegal immigrant in the U.S. A deportation officer must know the laws and regulations which determine an illegal immigrant status. They work with Homeland Security officials to ensure the proper handling of all matters and paperwork. A deportation may testify in court.

Deportation officer educational requirements: Typically the job requires a little more than a high school diploma or GED. A BA in Criminal Justice is helpful. Before becoming a deportation officer, most people have a few years of experience working in standard law enforcement.

Average 2018 deportation officer salary: $54,073

31. Deputy Sheriff

Deputy sheriffs work in multiple capacities. They typically work on the county level to ensure the safety of a community. Most often deputy sheriffs respond to community needs such as issuing warrants or dealing with traffic violations. Often, however, the tasks a deputy sheriff include: Detaining and processing prisoners, serving as a bailiff, or engaging in criminal investigations. Also, a deputy sheriff (who is not an elected official) does a great deal to influence the voters who elect the sheriff to office.

Deputy sheriff educational requirements: A deputy sheriff should have a two-year associate degree or a four-year bachelor's degree or a certification from a vocational training school, especially in a field such as criminal justice. A degree in law enforcement and administration or behavioral science may help in the application process.

Average 2018 deputy sheriff salary: $43,029

32. Digital Forensics Examiner

A digital forensics examiner knows better than anyone that dumping an incriminating document into the computer's trash does not erase a criminal trail. This highly specialized field of investigation puts an investigator up close and personal with incriminating data and files often retrieved from damaged computers. A digital forensics examiner is an expert at knowing how to uncover and restore lost or hidden files.

A digital forensics examiner job is perfect for someone with a great ability to work alone and focus for long hours on a very specific task. A digital forensics examiner is also deeply interested in keeping up to speed with the latest technologies and computer innovations.

Digital forensics examiner educational requirements: The job often requires education or certifications in computer science, criminal justice and or computer and digital forensics programs.

Average 2018 digital forensics examiner salary: $60,618

33. Diplomatic Security Agent

A diplomatic security agent ensures the safety of diplomatic activities taking place between ambassadors and other high level individuals. A diplomatic security agent may find himself organizing and creating a secure environment for a meeting. He may also be in charge of taking care of individual dignitaries or working in a more wide ranging project such as investigating visa fraud.

Diplomatic security agents learn about explosives as well as first aid and self-defense techniques. This is a position for someone who is willing to do both physical and mental work which may lead to physically threatening circumstances.

Diplomatic security agent educational requirements: Some positions may require a bachelor's degree.

Average 2018 diplomatic security agent salary: $43,226 – $58,092

34. Drug Enforcement Administration Agent

Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) agents investigate the massive crime rings associated with drug imports and related violent crimes in the U.S. DEA agents spearhead drug intelligence programs and are responsible for the arrest of criminals. They evaluate evidence and may also work internationally to stop dangerous criminals who infect the country with illicit drugs. DEA agents may work in dangerous areas. DEA agents need good communication skills.

DEA agent educational requirements: Typically they need a bachelor's degree in criminal justice, criminology, sociology or in another field.

Average 2018 DEA agent salary: $65,000

35. Federal Air Marshal

"Independent" and "incognito" are two terms which describe a federal air marshal. A federal air marshal dedicates himself to protecting people who work on or travel on commercial airliners. Often working with no backup, a federal air marshal must be armed with a gun at all times and have confidence that any time he fires a gun, the shot will land with accuracy.

A federal air marshal must be able to recognize suspicious behavior while at the same time blending in with other passengers in order to serve in the most effective way possible.

Federal air marshal educational requirements: Applicants with master's degrees in criminal justice, police science, aviation management, or similar specialties may improve their chances of obtaining a job as a federal air marshal.

Average 2018 federal air marshal salary: $47,000

36. Federal Bureau of Investigation Agent

A federal bureau of investigation (FBI) agent is one of the few glamorized law enforcement positions which may actually live up to its reputation.

An FBI agent, highly trained individual, works to protect the U.S. in a myriad of probable capacities. An FBI agent may investigate espionage, weapons of mass destruction, terrorism, or organized crime. An FBI agent is part of an organization which values dedication and integrity and commitment to the force. FBI agents sometimes work long hours in which physical and mental stresses are regular.

Federal Bureau of Investigation agent educational requirements: The minimum education requirement is a bachelor's degree from an accredited college or university with an overall GPA of 3.0 or higher. Many agents have studied criminal justice, political science, engineering, computer science, or accounting, and some of them have completed a law degree.

Average 2018 Federal Bureau of Investigation agent salary: $68,209

37. Federal Protective Service Officer

People with this job need to know a great deal about federal buildings and facilities which need continuous protection. A federal protective service officer promotes the safe operations of a federal building that goes well beyond the basics of installing and maintaining a fire alarm or security system. This officer receives training to understand the vulnerabilities of a facility and ensure it is safe from unlawful entry or terrorist attacks.

A federal protective service agent may organize emergency preparedness drills, hire security teams, and employ K-9 aided officers to maintain the safety of a building or compound. A good understanding of architecture and all main systems is vital for this position. A federal protective service officer must have excellent planning skills.

Federal protective service officer educational requirements: A formal college education program is not a requirement for most FPS security positions; however, many candidates for federal law enforcement jobs choose to complete a four-year degree program as to best prepare for a career in this field. Typical bachelor degree programs include: sociology, criminal justice, criminology, emergency management, homeland security, and police science.

Average 2018 federal protective service officer salary: $89,000

38. Field Asset Protection Analyst

A field asset protection analyst is well acquainted with illegal financial workings that involve fraud and money laundering. Companies hire a field asset protection analyst to review the data and monetary exchanges of a company for any loss of profit or suspicious transactions. This position requires the ability to focus intently on large bodies of data to locate patterns which suggest illegal financial activity.

Field asset protection analyst educational requirements: A field asset protection analyst should have a bachelor's degree preferably in the area of criminology, political science or accounting.

Average 2018 field asset protection analyst salary: $41,392

39. Fingerprint Specialist

A fingerprint specialist has a proverbial magnifying lens hovering over a fingerprint fragment. This very specialized career demands an attention to detail both on a crime scene and in a forensics laboratory. A fingerprint specialist is in her own way reconstructing the portrait of a criminal through using the latest technologies available to piece together bits of evidence accidentally left by a perpetrator of a crime.

Their skills include knowing how to lift prints from all types of surfaces and then examine and compare whatever fingerprint data she has with thousands of records stored in a computerized system. A fingerprint specialist may provide courtroom testimony. This is a job for a detailed and precision-loving individual.

Fingerprint specialist educational requirements: Some jobs may require a four year bachelor's degree with a major sequence in forensic science or criminal justice.

2018 fingerprint specialist salary: $105,211 up to $136,771

40. Forensic Accountant

Just as a detective might scour a location for clues to illuminate how a crime was committed, a forensic accountant dives into financial records to explore and interpret potentially shady monetary dealings. A forensic accountant often works for lawyers or police departments in order to locate motives for crimes or to determine if somebody illegally deposited sums of cash into secret bank accounts.

A forensic accountant is a master of tracing transactions that can incriminate wrongdoers. A forensic accountant understands finances. Forensic accountants are experts in explaining how they come to conclusions.

Forensic accountant educational requirements: A forensic accountant should have at least a bachelor's degree in accounting or forensic accounting. A degree in criminal justice is also useful.

Average 2018 forensic accountant salary: $65,607

41. Forensic Anthropologist

Examining the remains of a long-buried corpse and assessing the cause of death falls under the forensic anthropologist job description. This unique position is generally very difficult to obtain and requires a great deal of concentrated study. A forensic anthropologist must be able to interpret the clues presented by the skeletal structure to determine the age, sex, and even health of the person before death. This field of study is also called osteology.

Because of the deep knowledge needed for this occupation, the person who desires to become a forensic anthropologist must spend a great amount of time in a university setting dedicating himself to learning the ins and outs of examining remains.

Forensic anthropologist educational requirements: Most organizations require a forensic anthropologist to have a doctoral degree.

Average 2018 forensic anthropologist salary: $55,750

42. Forensic Artist

Gifted with an incredible gift of putting images to words, a forensic artist creates portraits based on visual descriptions. A forensic artist understands and translates physical descriptions from key witnesses onto paper. This position also requires an ability to ask the correct questions in a sensitive manner so a witness has time to think and reassemble the mental image of what may be a very quick encounter with a criminal. At times a forensic artist may also have to prepare an age enhanced image of a person or reconstruct a face from a partial image.

Forensic artist educational requirements: An associate degree in drawing may put a person on a path to becoming a forensic artist. Some employers may prefer a Bachelor in Fine Arts degree. The International Association of Identification (IAI) offers a professional certification in forensic artistry.

2018 forensic artist salary: $31,720 and $65,234

43. Forensic Botanist

How did a particular species of grass or algae end up on the coat sleeves of a murder victim? When such clues are central to solving a mystery, investigators often call in a forensic botanist. A forensic botanist is an expert in tracing where certain plants grow and can often lead police officials very close to areas where crimes have been committed.

Forensic botanists often work carefully and with great delicacy examining microscopic samples and then researching how or why such samples are clues to crimes. This is a highly specialized field which requires a dedication and ability to concentrate for long hours on complex and scientific research.

Forensic botanist educational requirements: Forensic botanists often have no training specific to forensic science, instead, their educational background is usually in the form of a bachelor's or graduate degree in botany and/or biology, which includes expertise in plant science sub-disciplines such as ecology, systematics, plant chemistry, and molecular biology.

Average 2018 forensic botanist salary: $49,284

44. Forensic Chemist

They analyze and perform tests on crime scene evidence to determine the composition and nature of materials and to determine the source. They also match samples. A forensic chemist may provide their conclusions in court. They also perform tests to measure concentrations of controlled substances.

Forensic chemist educational requirements: This job requires a bachelor's degree in chemistry, forensic sciences or a relevant subject. Some positions may require an advanced degree. Some jobs may allow candidates to substitute some educational requirements with professional experience. Forensic chemists need good communication skills.

Average 2018 forensic chemist salary: $55,001

45. Forensic DNA Analyst

Unlocking the mysteries of a crime often culminates in the scientific laboratory of a forensic DNA analyst. A forensic DNA analyst is responsible for examining trace DNA samples from the clothing of victims and crime scenes in order to link individuals and events to crimes. A forensic DNA analyst may work to amplify or purify DNA samples. She then records and carefully files all her findings according to very strict protocols established by the company or government agency that employs her.

When asked to testify in a trial, a forensic DNA analyst must be able to present their findings in an articulate and clear manner.

Forensic DNA analyst educational requirements: Individuals interested in a forensic DNA analyst careers may obtain undergraduate degrees such as: Bachelor of Science in Biology, DNA Analysis Methods, Bachelor of Science in Biological Sciences, Bachelor of Science in Forensic Science, Bachelor of Science in Molecular Biology and more.

Graduate programs often pursued by individuals interested in careers as forensic DNA analysts include: Master of Science in Forensic Science, Master of Science in Forensic and Conservation Genetics, Master of Science in Forensic Analysis, Master of Science in Molecular Biology, Master of Science in Human and Molecular Genetics and more.

Average 2018 Forensic DNA analyst salary: $50,826

46. Forensic Document Examiner

A forensic document examiner is an expert at determining if specific documents have been altered or forged. A forensic document examiner knows how to identify texts and paperwork for suspicious telltale signs. He may look at the paper quality, watermarks, or handwriting samples to eliminate or certify forgeries. They sometimes testify in court trials.

A forensic document examiner must be a detailed individual who has a keen eye for minor discrepancies between actual and faked texts.

Forensic document examiner educational requirements: A bachelor's degree in forensic science or a similar program.

Average 2018 forensic document examiner salary: $62,238

47. Forensic Entomologist

A lot of people have seen those grisly moments in films when a scientist removes an insect from some part of a corpse. Well, that TV scientist has a name, a forensic entomologist. A forensic entomologist is intimately familiar with the breeding habits and life cycles of insects. This very unique knowledge proves crucial when identifying how long a person has been dead or what may have led to the death, itself.

A forensic scientist can provide law enforcement a great deal of information through simply identifying life stages of insects to ascertain when a person died and even perhaps where, based on what insects are found on a body. A person who pursues this field of study should be prepared to spend many hours studying in a college setting.

Forensic entomologist educational requirements: Forensic entomologists are board-certified forensic scientists who have a Ph.D. in entomology. In addition to a doctorate degree in entomology, a forensic entomologist must complete coursework specific to the forensic application of entomology. There are a few institutions in the United States that offer graduate degrees or specializations in forensic entomology.

Average 2018 forensic entomologist salary: $56,786

48. Forensic Firearms Examiner

If a bullet is found buried in a wall where a violent crime has taken place, how do the police prove which gun fired it? The analysis falls under the authority of a forensic firearms examiner. They're experts in studying the bullet's scars and markings and linking them to a weapon. Forensic firearms examiners perform most of their work in a lab; however, they may also visit a crime site to gather information.

A forensic firearms examiner job requires a deep understanding of weapons and their idiosyncratic qualities. They gather evidence, store, and file it all correctly in order to preserve the correct interpretation of past events.

Forensic firearms and toolmark examiner educational requirements: As forensic scientists, firearms/toolmark examiners must complete a formal course of study through a bachelor's or graduate degree program from an accredited college or university. Degree programs suitable for work in this field, include: Criminal justice, Forensic science, Criminology, Biology, Biochemistry, Chemistry, and Physics.

Further, many employers require study in quantitative analysis and general chemistry. It is also commonplace for firearms/toolmark examiners to pursue graduate degrees in one of the physical sciences.

Average 2018 forensic firearms toolmark examiner salary: $53,055

49. Forensic Psychologist

When a victim or suspect exhibits behaviors such as compulsive lying or delusions of grandeur, police often summon a forensic psychologist to conduct an evaluation. A forensic psychologist receives training to both counsel those in need and advise courts on many issues such as guardianship issues and competency.

A forensic psychologist must be a good communicator with the authorities and as well as with those being assessed. He must be able to determine basic personality disorders and support his findings with accurate reports or testimonies.

Forensic psychologist educational requirements: In most cases forensic psychologists need a doctoral degree in psychology, usually in clinical or counseling psychology. People typically obtain a Ph.D. or Psy.D. in clinical psychology before earning some type of postdoctoral training and specialization in forensic psychology. Some schools offer degrees specifically focused on forensic psychology which combine courses in both psychology and law.

Average 2018 forensic psychologist salary: $62,778

50. Forensic Science Technician

These technicians may work at crime scenes and at laboratories. They collect evidence at crime scenes and conduct scientific and technical analysis in laboratories or offices. Many forensic technicians specialize in laboratory analysis or in crime scene investigation. This field has a wide range of specific interests.

A forensic science technician may choose to focus on an area such as fingerprints, ballistics, or even computers and electronics. He may also have to testify in court proceedings recounting the evidence and test results.

Forensic science technician educational requirements: Forensic science techs typically have a bachelor's degree. Applicants who graduated from applied sciences technology programs and have extensive training on using laboratory equipment may have an edge. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the vast majority of aspiring forensic science technicians have a "bachelor's degree in the natural sciences and a master's degree in forensic science."

Average 2018 forensic science technician salary: $47,787

51. Forensic Scientist

A forensic scientist specializes in exploring criminal evidence which falls in the areas of chemistry, biology, and toxicology. The very specialized area of scientific processes which evaluates hair and blood samples fall under her domain. She may look into clues which involve questions involving drug or toxic poisonings. Often this position is a supervisory one which requires a certain amount of leadership and organizational prowess. A forensic scientist must be able to justify the findings of their team and then interact professionally with law enforcement.

Forensic scientist educational requirements: The job typically requires a minimum of a bachelor's degree in natural science or forensic science. Some positions may require a master's degree. Some positions require a doctoral degree.

Average 2018 forensic scientist salary: $53,055

52. Forensic Serologist

Analogous to interpreting Rorschach ink blots, a forensic serologist may interpret blood splatter evidence at a crime scene to help law enforcement personnel visualize how a crime took place. Working in line with blood splatter investigations, semen or saliva analysis, a forensic serologist specializes in the study of bodily fluids linked to criminal activity.

forensic serologists are experts in the field and in the lab and may determine if blood at a scene is human or animal or if a DNA sample matches another sample. This job is best suited for those who enjoy using their analytical skills.

Forensic serologist educational requirements: A forensic serologist needs at least an undergraduate degree in biology, biochemistry, molecular biology, genetics or a relevant natural science preferably with additional coursework in math and criminal investigation. Some law enforcement agencies may require advanced degrees as well, either in biology or in forensic science or criminal justice.

A survey by the American Society of Crime Lab Directors showed some forensic lab directors expect their serologists to have degrees in chemistry, followed by biology and forensic science. Serologists need at least an undergraduate degree in biology, biochemistry, molecular biology, genetics or another natural science closely related to the study of bodily fluids.

Average 2018 forensic serologist salary: $52,180

53. Forensic Toxicologist

A forensic toxicologist provides expert analysis of how environmental contaminants come into play during criminal investigations. These activities may range from conducting simple drug and alcohol testing activities to more complex analyses such as evaluation how exposure to certain chemicals is affecting an entire community. This is a job for someone interested in exploring how poisons and other chemicals affect the human body and applying those findings to criminal investigations.

Forensic toxicologist educational requirements: Forensic toxicologists must complete, at a minimum, a bachelor's degree in forensic science, toxicology, chemistry, clinical chemistry, or a related field. Many forensic toxicologists obtain a graduate degree such as a graduate degree in toxicology.

Average 2018 forensic toxicologist salary: $59,322

54. Fraud Analyst

The world of banking, as secure as it is, cannot deflect all corruption. Forgeries occur, and conniving people find ways to steal money through fraud. A fraud analyst is the detail-oriented person who knows how to get to the bottom of suspicious banking activities. A fraud analyst works for a bank to follow a trail of clues back to the individuals who steal money or identities from banking customers. He may comb through transactions or compare spending habits. This position requires an ability to focus on complex data and make solid, educated deductions.

Fraud analyst educational requirements: Although no specific field of study is required, fraud analysts typically have a bachelor degrees in computer science, finance, banking or a related field.

Average 2018 fraud analyst salary: $46,344

55. Fraud Investigator

When a large company is responsible for losing financial and credit card information of its customers to thieves, law enforcement agencies hire a fraud analyst to explore how this may have happened. A fraud analyst may also act as an advisor to a company to help prevent the occurrence of such a scenario.

This is a very dynamic occupation as it hinges on knowing the most cutting edge tactics used by criminals who study how to invade systems in order to steal information. In addition, while needing to know the ins and outs of such systems, a fraud investigator may interview suspects out in the field and interact with law enforcement agencies on a regular basis. A good mind for logical thinking and an ability to analyze data are important qualities to have in this line of work.

Fraud investigator educational requirements: A minimum of a bachelor's degree is generally necessary to become a fraud investigator. Fraud investigators obtain a bachelor degree in an area such as economic crime, fraud management, accounting, criminal justice, law, or business administration.

Average 2018 fraud investigator salary: $58,567

56. Homicide Detective

“Book 'em, Danno!” Perhaps one of the few criminal justice jobs that lives true to its reputation, the homicide detective is a true sleuth who uses his analytical capabilities and courage to solve very serious crimes. This is a job requiring a sense of commitment to a community and a law enforcement agency. An ability to assess situations quickly and see patterns in human behavior remains at the core of this job description.

A homicide detective should expect to work long and odd hours. He must be able to withstand the pressures of a very demanding job which often places him in precarious situations.

Homicide detective educational requirements: The minimum education requirements include a high school diploma, law enforcement certification, and experience as a law enforcement officer. Many agencies, however, require homicide detectives have at least a two-year or a four-year degree in criminal justice, forensic science, or a related field, and experience as a sworn law enforcement officer.

Average 2018 homicide detective salary: $62,774

57. Immigration and Customs Enforcement Agent

Looking for a “cool” job? Try being an ICE agent. ICE stands for U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement. ICE agents are often the people apprehending criminals who bring illegal guns or drugs into the U.S. In short, they are responsible for preventing smuggling of all sorts between U.S. and foreign borders. This also includes preventing illegal aliens from entering the United States.

An ICE agent should expect to work long and often irregular hours which can involve overtime pay. The person who takes on this position should be comfortable working with firearms and confronting suspicious individuals.

ICE agent educational requirements: ICE agents are typically required to have a GL-7 level standing: One full year of graduate level education beyond a bachelor's degree or Superior Academic Achievement (S.A.A.) in an undergraduate degree qualifies one at the GL-7 level.

Average 2018 ICE agent salary: $86,047

58. Immigration Enforcement Agent

A very specific focus of the immigration enforcement (IEA) agent is to detain and expel foreigners who violate U.S. borders. The actions an IEA agent may take include pursuing and physically overpowering drug smugglers or terrorists. Once an IEA details a suspect, he may have to process and transport the individual. An IEA agent learns all the protocols which accompany working with prisoners and at times may learn a foreign language.

Immigration enforcement agent educational requirements: The minimum requirement for an immigration enforcement agent at the GS-5 level is a bachelor's degree or professional experience equivalent to three years as a GS-4 federal law enforcement officer. A bachelor's degree is the standard for federal positions.

Average 2018 immigration enforcement agent salary: $86,047

59. Information Security Officer

An information security officer (ISSO) is the firewall expert who knows how to assess and protect security systems for organizations. This career calls for a person who enjoys keeping up to speed on the latest technological advancements in building and adjusting network security. This may include protecting government agencies against any sort of internet based invasion by terrorists. An ISSO may also make sure the system he is responsible for is updated and meets all the criteria for certification.

Information security officer educational requirements: They typically need at least a bachelor's degree in computer science, computer programming, computer engineering, or a similar area. Some organizations may require a graduate degree in business administration with an information systems concentration.

Average 2018 ISSO salary: $90,041

60. Inmate Records Coordinator

This position, despite the title, entails more than an ability to file and keep individual prison records. An inmate records keeper often has a college degree and specializes in keeping track of the activities within an entire prison. He may adjust prison sentences based on inmate behavior and other factors. An inmate records keeper holds a steady watch on other aspects, as well. He may oversee job duties or make recommendations to the IT staff. Careful documentation is, of course, central to this job.

Inmate records coordinators understand human behavior patterns and must be able to predict how well a prisoner will take to being released. A prison inmate records coordinator must be comfortable spending a great deal of time with people who commit crimes and must be vigilant and prepared for outburst or violent behavior.

Inmate records coordinator educational requirements: An inmate records coordinator should have an associate degree in psychology, guidance and counseling, penology, sociology, social work and/or criminology plus two years of experience in a correctional setting. Any combination of education from an accredited college or university in a related field and/or direct experience in this occupation totaling four years may substitute for the required education and experience.

Average 2018 inmates records coordinator salary: $31,179

61. Inspector General Investigator

When you think of an inspector general investigator, think about honesty and integrity. An inspector general investigator is a neutral person who works to locate and eliminate any sort of fraud or inefficiency within a given governmental department. His main objective is to look into programs and operations in order to reestablish or maintain that all members are working with integrity and ethics. He may look into financial records or other aspects of departmental activities to ensure no abuse is taking place.

Inspector general educational requirements: An inspector general should have at least a high school diploma and five years of experience, an associate degree and three years of experience, or a bachelor's degree and one year of experience. Typically a degree in any area suffices.

Average 2018 inspector general investigator salary: $69,000

62. Internal Revenue Service Criminal Investigator

When tax evasion moves from being an oversight and becomes a deliberate act, the Internal Revenue Service or IRS sends in a criminal investigator. The issues an IRS criminal investigator evaluates usually fall into categories such as money laundering and fraud. In order to locate the tax money owed to the U.S. government, an IRS criminal investigator needs to be familiar with the techniques used in forensic exploration of computer systems and internet banking systems.

An IRS criminal investigator has a great ability to analyze and interpret complex financial data.

IRS Criminal investigator educational requirements: Typical qualifications for an IRS criminal investigator include: GS-4: an associate degree or two years of vocational training; GS-5: a bachelor's degree or four years of pre-professional education; GS-7: completion of a year of graduate education, bachelor's degrees with superior academic achievement, or five years of pre-professional education; GS-9: Master's degree or two years of graduate-level training.

Average 2018 IRS criminal investigator salary: $115,871

63. Internal Revenue Service Internal Security Inspector

A person with this job ensures the IRS has no corruption and IRS employees have a high level of integrity. They investigate alleged misconduct or illegal activities involving IRS employees or other people, including activities such as attempts to bribe or corrupt employees. They also investigate assaults or threats made against IRS employees. They also perform background investigations of prospective IRS employees.

Internal revenue internal security inspector educational requirements: Applicants must have completed four years of college level study or three years of closely related experience or an equivalent of education and experience.

Average 2018 internal revenue service internal security inspector salary: $73,000

64. Investigative Specialist

What are those guys sitting in the big black van doing while an undercover detective interacts with a gang of criminals? Who sets up the hidden cameras to capture suspects in the act of breaking and entering? The investigative specialist is the brains behind the technology investigators use as evidence. An investigative specialist must not only understand and implement the technology used during eavesdropping, he must also be able to maintain a steady watch over the suspected activities and interpret the findings.

An investigative specialist must have a great deal of patience and know when to act and when to remain quiet. This is a job which requires a combination of patience, technological savvy, and a clear understanding of how to interpret human behavior.

Investigative specialist educational requirements: An investigative specialist should earn an associate degree in criminal justice or two years of college study with a major in criminal justice, criminology, or a related field.

Average 2018 investigative specialist salary: $52,587

65. Jail Inspector

As a prison structure ages or as more inmates are moved into a facility, a jail inspector oversees any repairs or accommodation adjustments. They're responsible for making sure a prison facility meets the standard requirements for housing prisoners safely and humanely. Along with understanding the fluctuations of population in prisons and the flow of activity around the facility, a prison inspector must also make recommendations for change based on budgets. Good analytical and financial skills are a must in this career.

Jail inspector educational requirements: A jail inspector needs to complete undergraduate core coursework in criminal justice or a related field.

Average 2018 jail inspector salary: $33,685

66. Jail Screener

A jail screener specializes in adjusting prison sentences and processing inmates. They base their assessments on inmate behavior and other factors such as test interpretations and even budgetary issues. Jail screeners stay current on the privacy of prison inmates and interact with them in a variety of instances. Careful documentation is central to this job. The person who takes on this career, understands human behavior patterns and must be able to predict how well a prisoner will take to being released.

Jail screener educational requirements: A jail screener may seek an associate degree with a focus in criminal justice, sociology, psychology, social work, or related field.

Average 2018 jail screener salary: $55,509

67. Juvenile Probation Officer

When a teenage boy or girl finds trouble with the law, a juvenile probation officer (JPO) becomes involved. A juvenile probation officer wears many hats. He may have as many as 100 young people to follow as they make their ways back into society. A juvenile probation officer may make home visits or meet with young people in his office as they report back to him about the progress made in school, community service, or court appearances. He may have late night phone calls when emergencies arise.

Juvenile probation officers should be emotionally ready to see the best and the worst in young people struggling to find a path in life.

Juvenile probation officer educational requirements: They usually work for the state and most states require a minimum of a bachelor's degree in criminal justice, social work, psychology, education, or human services. Others may require a master's degree or a predetermined length of experience as a probation officer in lieu of an advanced degree.

Average 2018 juvenile probation officer salary: $39,562

68. Loss Control Specialist

How many people were injured at a work site? How can a company save money implementing staff training to cut excessive exposure to dangerous circumstances? Risk management is the important concept powering the career of a loss control specialist. A loss control specialist conducts an organizational evaluation to determine where money is lost through safety-related issues. A control loss specialist may get involved in issues such as the fire safety of structures and ensuring the protocols for emergency evacuations are up-to-date.

A loss control specialist job often requires travel and frequent appearances at various facilities where the loss control specialist completes inspections.

Loss control specialist educational requirements: A loss control specialist may obtain a bachelor's degree in criminal justice or a related field. Adding two to four years related experience and/or training to the degree is advisable. At times, employer accept an equivalent combination of education and experience.

Average 2018 loss control specialist salary: $59,544

69. Mediator

When a legal dispute can be solved amicably through mediation, everyone wins. A mediator can assist two parties having a dispute and save everyone money through collaboration and compromise rather than using lawyers. Although most legal disputes are not always agreeable, the best mediators know how to balance agreements and see both sides of the picture to create an agreeable settlement.

A mediator position requires a deep understanding of the legal areas in which a mediator specializes. In addition, a mediator must be able to conduct herself in a calm and collected manner in order to achieve an atmosphere of cooperation between her clients.

Mediator educational requirements: A mediator typically completes a two-year master's program in dispute resolution, conflict management, or a doctoral program.

Average 2018 mediator salary: $51,401

70. Narcotics Officer

If flushing out the distributors of illegal drugs in your town, county, or country sounds like an exciting or satisfying job, look into a narcotics officer job. Narcotics officers look into drug trafficking routes or investigate drug rings with other agents. This job requires working long hours in dangerous situations; however, it may also include a great deal of report writing and attention to detail when presenting evidence.

Narcotics officer educational requirements: Typically, narcotics officers have the same educational requirements as regular police officers. According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, some agencies might require a bachelor's degree while others require only a high school diploma. Many law enforcement agencies require a narcotics enforcement officer to have a two or a four year degree, preferably with a major in police science or criminology.

Average 2018 narcotics officer salary: $61,600

71. National Security Agency Police Officer

The National Security Agency (NSA) employs officers to patrol and protect its properties. This term covers a number of responsibilities related to keeping NSA facilities secure. NSA police officers may work in routine positions such as regulating pedestrian or automobile traffic on a specific site. Other positions may take on the responsibilities of handling critical incidents or firearms training. An NSA police officer must pass drug testing and demonstrate a strong ethical character as well as commit to serving the NSA with loyalty.

NSA Police Officer educational requirements: An NSA police officer needs at a minimum an associate degree (many NSA police officers hold degrees in criminal justice.) An NSA police officer with a history of military experience or work experience applicable to the duties of NSA police officers may have an advantage.

Average 2018 NSA Police Officer salary: $50,283

72. Parole Officer

When a prisoner goes AWOL after released from jail, a parole officer may be at fault. A parole officer remains in charge of a number of released inmates for a designated period of time. The parole officer must diligently check up on the individuals under his supervision to make certain each one behaves according to dictates established by the courts. A parole officer keeps tabs on where a newly released prisoner goes in order to prevent a relapse into the life of crime.

A parole officer position requires excellent organizational skills for completing and filing paperwork. Additionally, parole officers need excellent communication skills. They need to be comfortable working with potentially dangerous people who are tempted to break the law.

Parole officer educational requirements: A parole officer typically completes coursework for a bachelor's degree in criminal justice, psychology, social work, or related field

Average 2018 parole officer salary: $42,493

73. Police Detective

Exempt from wearing the traditional police officer uniform, police detectives work to solve particular cases assigned to them. A police detective may specialize in a specific category of crime such as theft or homicide. This position represents a step up from the entry level position of police officer and requires a person aspiring to become a police detective to first spend time in uniform.

A police detective displays strong analytical skills and has a deep understanding of law and protocol at crime scenes. Police officers are excellent record keepers and do not flinch in the face of danger.

Police detective educational requirements: A high school diploma is the minimum education required for this job; though completing a degree program in criminal justice or a related field may have some career benefits. Most law enforcement agencies prefer candidates that have at least an associate degree in an area such as criminology, sociology, psychology, or criminal investigation. Those with a bachelor's degree in one of these areas may have an advantage on their competitors.

Average 2018 police detective salary: $59,811

74. Police Officer

The duties of a police officer range from providing safety within a community to offering citizens comfort during distress to educating school children on issues of drug abuse.

A police officer may work to enforce traffic regulations, or he may work alongside a K-9 companion working to locate hidden drugs. Police officers may work long hours. A certain degree of comfort confronting suspicious persons is a must as is the ability to witness violent crime scenes. Police officers should have integrity as well as the ability to write clear reports and recount details accurately when asked to deliver testimony at a trial.

Police officer educational requirements: The educational requirements vary by state and, in most cases, by city department. The minimal level of education is typically a high school diploma or a G.E.D certification. However, many departments around the country require at least a couple of years of college coursework, such as an associate degree in criminal justice.

Average 2018 police officer salary: $50,355

75. Prison Warden

A prison warden holds a very powerful position in a very dangerous facility. A prison warden oversees the entire scope of a prison facilities operations. He does more during a day than just monitor who is released or incarcerated. A prison warden must have an understanding of the budgetary issues regarding prison upkeep and maintenance as well as keeping his finger on the pulse of the infirmary, cafeteria, grounds and staff. A prison warden has an excellent understanding of psychology and is a good communicator with a strong sense of order and discipline.

Prison warden educational requirements: The job typically requires a bachelor's degree in criminology, criminal justice, administration of justice, social work, or other in other relevant subjects.

Average 2018 prison warden salary: $80,558

76. Private Investigator

He plays a vital role getting information for individuals, law offices and corporations. Private investigators often have histories of police service and are required to have licenses to function legally. This position requires an ability to solve mysteries through the use of logical thinking skills. A private investigator creates a business and keeps track of expenses as well as organizes information gathered for clients.

Private investigator educational requirements: While there is no formal education process to becoming a private investigator, a degree in criminal justice might be beneficial.

Average 2018 private investigator salary: $46,716

77. Probate Investigator

If a child's custody hangs in the balance, a probate officer arrives to settle the matter. Skilled in the evaluation of the ability of a parent or foster parent to care for a child, a probate officer makes a recommendation to the courts. These recommendations often require ensuring a guardian is using government funds correctly or adjusting circumstances so a child receives proper medical attention. This job requires a deep understanding of custody laws as well as sensitivity to how changes affect the lives of young people.

Probate investigator educational requirements: A probate investigator often holds a Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Science degree in science, social science, behavioral science, liberal arts, or nursing.

Average 2018 probate investigator salary: $50,983

78. Probation Officer

"An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." You can apply this familiar saying to the role of a probation officer. A probation officer, unlike a parole officer, oversees individuals who receive probation instead of incarceration. In lieu of reporting to a probation officer, these individuals avoid prison but are still bound to make visits to a probation officer to supervise their activities.

A probation officer in many ways behaves as a counselor who helps struggling individuals stay on track with work or community service or drug addiction rehabilitation. A probation officer needs good communication skills.

Probation officer educational requirements: Typically, probation officers work for the state or, in some cases, for the federal government. They usually must have a bachelor's degree in criminal justice, sociology, psychology, or a related field. For federal positions or for more advanced positions, a candidate might need a master's degree in one of those fields, in social work, or in counseling.

Average 2018 probation officer salary: $41,060

79. Probation Officer Supervisor

While understanding the pitfalls of helping troubled individuals improve their lives, a probation officer supervisor spends a great deal of time managing a team of probation officers who may come to her for advice or support. In addition, a probation officer supervisor manages case flows and time sheets. She also keeps up to speed on the most recent regulations and policy changes. While being an excellent communicator is crucial to her job, a probation officer supervisor must also be an excellent administrator.

Probation officer supervisor educational requirements: Employers typically require at least a bachelor's degree.

Average 2018 Probation officer supervisor salary: $55,927

80. Property Room Technician

They label and store belongings until the prisoner is released. A property room technician determines if certain items are retained or discarded. He may also have the job of preparing items for trial. A property room technician should be an honest person with good organizational skills.

Property room technician educational requirements: A high school education or equivalent suffices. A related post-secondary education in the natural sciences or criminal justice fields is desirable as is one to three years of property room experience and/or experience working in a laboratory setting.

Average 2018 property room technician salary: $34,070

81. Revenue Enforcement Specialist

This is one person you do not want knocking at your door. A revenue enforcement specialist collects delinquent taxes. She helps people with outstanding tax payments figure out a way to make the payments. A revenue enforcement specialist need to understand the rules and regulations regarding taxes. A good understanding of mathematics combined with sensitivity for people in financial crisis is a handy quality.

Revenue enforcement specialist educational requirements: A revenue enforcement specialist typically need a bachelor's or advanced degree in business or finance. Comparable qualifications include degrees in accounting, banking, insurance, real estate, economics, taxation, criminal justice, law enforcement, criminology, law, legal assistant studies, paralegal studies. At times a paralegal certificate is also acceptable.

Average 2018 revenue enforcement specialist salary: $41,445

82. Security Coordinator

They develop, coordinate and evaluate security programs for organizations. Security coordinators make sure programs are effective and they determine if additional resources are required. The position requires a deep understanding of security systems. Security coordinators may also be involved with organizing efforts with police departments or other agencies in the event of disasters or other events which threaten the assets they keep safe.

Security coordinator educational requirements: A security coordinator should earn an associate degree in criminal justice or security. Some employers prefer a bachelor's degree.

Average 2018 security coordinator salary: $52,160

83. Secret Service Agent

Does a life dedicated to protecting the lives of dignitaries sound interesting? Or perhaps you would rather work in the area of unraveling a fraud investigation for the government. A secret service agent has potential to do both of these jobs as well as a variety of others which involve protection and investigation.

A secret service agent must undergo a personal background check and may need to speak or learn a foreign language. In many cases this job exposes a secret service agent to danger as well as to circumstances which involve travel. A secret service agent should be prepared to carry a weapon. They need to learn the protocols which involve protection of individuals or government properties at the highest level.

Secret service agent educational requirements: A secret service agent typically has a bachelor's degree or three years of criminal investigation or police experience.

Average 2018 secret service agent salary: $125,000

84. State Trooper

Protectors of local highways and byways, state troopers have a great responsibility to ensure drivers stick to the rules of the road. State troopers may be involved in basic activities such as monitoring speeds at roadsides or handling the aftermath of collisions. At times they may pursue dangerous criminals who are driving at breakneck speeds. In any case, state troopers must use excellent judgment when addressing an individual who has broken the law. Attention to detail and an ability to clearly document and write reports is central to this job.

State trooper educational requirements: Some positions require an associate degree in criminal justice or in a relevant field. Some government agencies may prefer a bachelor's degree.

Average 2018 state trooper salary: $54,380

85. Substance Abuse Counselor

Saving lives through compassion and tough love, a substance abuse counselor can help implement a 12-step program in an alcoholic's life. This position requires the substance abuse counselor to listen and discuss ways that a person suffering from a drug or alcohol addiction can make improvements in life and behaviors. This role requires patience as well as a solid understanding of human nature.

Substance abuse counselor educational requirements: Most states require a minimum of a bachelor's degree and supervised experience working with individuals who are addicted to drugs and/or alcohol.

Average 2018 substance abuse counselor salary: $38,243

86. Transit and Railroad Police Officer

Dedicated to making sure subways, busses, and public trains are safe, the transit and railroad police monitor public transportation systems. Transit and railroad police may receive training in emergency preparedness as well as have K-9 partners who ensure passengers are traveling in a safe, drug free environment. These individuals must be comfortable working in large groups where accidents and disasters are ever present.

Transit and railroad police officer educational requirements: The educational requirements for becoming a police officer vary by state and, in most cases, by city department. The minimal level of education often accepted by most police departments is a high school diploma or a G.E.D certification. However, many departments around the country require at least a couple of years of college coursework, such as an associate degree in criminal justice.

Average 2018 transit and railroad police officer salary: $52,000

87. Truancy Case Manager

Getting some kids to stay in school and make progress towards a successful happy life it tough. A truancy case manager is the one who cares enough about young people to monitor them and make certain they attend school. A truancy case manager keeps relationships with school staff and check in to confirm her assigned students are attending classes. She also maintains good relationships with parents and caregivers along with keeping excellent records of all interactions.

A good understanding of cultural beliefs and habits and excellent computer skills are helpful to a truancy case manager.

Truancy case manager educational requirements: Employers typically prefer a bachelor's degree in criminal justice or one of the behavioral sciences (social work, psychology, sociology) from an accredited college or university.

Average 2018 truancy case manager salary $38,972

88. U.S. Marshal

According to the U.S. Marshal Service website, this is the “nation's oldest and most versatile federal law enforcement.” U.S. marshals work in a number of federally appointed positions. They may work in prisons, or U.S. marshals may seek and transport fugitives across state lines. U.S. marshals operate the Witness Security Program. U.S. marshals need a deep commitment and a willingness to face dangerous circumstances.

U.S. marshal educational requirements: Most candidates typically need a bachelor's degree in a field such as criminal justice, criminology, or law enforcement.

Average 2018 U.S. marshal salary: $75,000

89. U.S. Postal Inspector

When a criminal breaks a law involving the postal service, a U.S. postal inspector evaluates and investigates the situation. For instance, if an individual sends illegal substances through the mail, this become the business of a postal inspector. U.S. postal inspectors can serve a warrant when appropriate; however, they may not open any mail unless they has a search warrant, even if things look very suspicious. This position requires a good analytical mind and a sincere interest in protecting innocent people who handle and deliver the mail.

U.S. postal inspector educational requirements: A bachelor's degree may suffice for obtaining employment as a U.S. postal inspector.

Average 2018 U.S. postal inspector salary: $61,503

90. Youth Correctional Counselor

Setting misguided kids back on track is the tough but rewarding task of a youth correctional counselor. This work involves more than simply listening and sharing stories with young people who find themselves in juvenile hall and sentenced. A youth correctional counselor is the go-between for school officials, parents, and law enforcement. This job requires being comfortable handling numerous cases and dealing with a great deal of paperwork.

At times, being a youth correctional counselor can be emotionally draining as topics of drug and sexual abuse arise.

Youth correctional counselor educational requirements: Candidates typically need a relevant bachelor's degree in criminal justice, social work, or counseling. Entry-level ICE agents must possess a bachelor's degree. A master's degree or evidence of at least one year of graduate study is also required. However, U.S. veterans and those with significant experience in law enforcement or the military may have the educational requirement waived.

2018 youth correctional counselor salary: $41,930