Communication Boards

A Story of Creating Connections

Imagine you are at a gathering. People are talking and laughing. They are sharing food, telling stories, and learning about each other. You are excited to join in and add to the conversation so you approach a group. As everyone turns to welcome you, words escape you. People stare in anticipation for you to say something, but you can't. You can't verbalize your thoughts. You can't express all of the things you want to say. Now imagine you are a child experiencing this. Wouldn't we do everything to help this child?

DPS school psychologists said, “Yes, we will help!” when they applied for a grant for elementary school playground communication boards. The boards are visual aids that provide a means of expression for students who may have difficulty with verbal communication. It consists of symbols, pictures, or words that students can point to or touch to convey their thoughts, needs, or emotions. These boards give every child a way to connect with others because we know every child's well-being matters.

School psychologist Amber Fridley shares, “This innovative tool is designed to enhance communication and interaction among our students, benefiting all, including those who may communicate in other ways than just using their voice. It is a vital resource for students with diverse abilities and communication styles. The communication board benefits all of our students!”

Communication Boards are Learning Tools for ALL

The communication boards promote natural play, friendship, cooperation, motivation, collaboration, and even safety by allowing all students to engage in meaningful interactions with peers and adults, regardless of their communication abilities.

Dickinson Adult Learning Center

Citizenship and Civics Grant

The Dickinson Adult Learning Center (DALC) received a grant from the Dickinson Public Schools Foundation to provide materials to start a Citizenship and Civics course so their students could learn more about American history, understand how our democracy works, and help them prepare for the U.S. Citizenship interview.

DALC participants took a big yellow bus to Bismarck last spring. They toured the North Dakota State Capitol, met Governor Burgum, and had lunch with senators and representatives. They also visited the North Dakota Heritage Center and State Museum.

"The visit to the Capital was very interesting because I got to see where they make the important decisions for our State. But the most important thing was the intention they had with us." reported one ALC participant.

This trip was the first step in creating a Citizenship and Civics class for DALC learners. "Hands-on learning is often the best kind of learning," stated Lindy Obach, DALC instructor who developed the course. The class started this fall on Thursday evenings. They currently have 10 students from countries including Sri Lanka, Haiti, Guatemala, and Mexico. In class, students are learning about U.S. History and Civics, N-400 Vocabulary, and Citizenship interview skills. "The students are doing great!" reported Lindy.
