CHOIR STUDENTS: Check out <https://www.musiciansway.com/for-singers> for warm-ups practice tips, and ideas.

Solfeg - This app has free songs you can learn and it shows you how to read the melody, chart out the chords, and read the rhythms. The songs are mostly modern pop songs, so you're likely to find something familiar. This is a great resource if you're playing around with your family piano, ukulele, or guitar while you're at home. You'll have to create a free account to access the song library.

Chrome Music Lab: You can make songs or play with different musical attributes, and you don't have to create an account or log in or anything. <https://musiclab.chromeexperiments.com/>

Incredibox: Allows you to create songs with a collection of beatbox rhythms.

The San Francisco Symphony <http://www.sfskids.org/conduct/>

The Metropolitan Opera is broadcasting operas for FREE. If you've never seen a live opera, I encourage you to 'attend' one in the next couple weeks. It's an amazing opportunity to see and hear live vocal and instrumental performances in one of the top opera houses of the world. The NY Philharmonic: learn more about the professional musicians who make up the orchestra - there is a link to biographies of the musicians. <https://nyphil.org>

The Seattle Symphony is providing live streams of performances twice a week; you can sign up to be notified here: <https://seattlesymphony.org/live> They also have an artist bio section that is fun to explore.
