Inferences

You make inferences
everytime that you read, often times without even knowing.

You are consistently putting together your schema (what you already know) and piecing together clues from the text to make inferences about the text that you are reading! In the mystery genre, this skill is especially important!

Let's practice with some images

What can you infer is happening in this picture? Use evidence from the image, as well as your schema!

Why is this woman eating a pie without using her hands?

We will now practice by identifying INCORRECT inferences made by a detective.

Directions:

1. Watch the video one time through without taking notes or answering any of the questions on the following slide.
2. Watch the video a second time and identify 3 INCORRECT inferences on the sticky note that the detective made!
3. Answer the questions on the following slide!

- He thought the stench of the mouse was a human decaying body
- He thought the tomato sauce was blood
- He thought he heard her being sliced up.

1. What is the detective looking at in the newspaper?
How does he appear to feel about the story?

2. What is the detective's first incorrect inference? Use evidence to support your answer!

What is actually happening?

More on next slide!

3. What is the detective's second incorrect inference?
Use evidence to support your answer!

What is actually happening?

4. What is the detective's third incorrect inference? Use evidence to support your answer!

What is actually happening?

Let's play "We Will Write!!"

Helpful Hints:

- Be as descriptive as you can. Pretend that you are telling a story!
- Try to add in some figurative language!
- Make sure your spelling is correct and your punctuation is correct!
- DO NOT CAPITALIZE RANDOM LETTERS!!
- I when it stands alone is always capitalized!

Mystery Crimes

Practice describing setting and character, and then introducing a problem. A good warm-up for writing with internal and external tension for the crime genre.

Describe the lights and shadows. Are all the lights working?

The question mark to the left of your writing will give you some good hints!
