Depression

Let's say that you've been feeling sad for no reason at all, are more tired than usual, have difficulty concentrating, and don't feel like being with your friends and family. These are all signs that you might be depressed. These activities will help your students learn what depression is, recognize its signs, and know what to do about it.

Discussion Questions

Note: The following questions are written in language appropriate for sharing with your students.

1. Think about some times you felt sad. What did you do to make yourself feel better? How is depression different from feeling sad?
2. Anyone can get depressed. Do you know someone who's been depressed? What are some ways to tell that someone is feeling depressed?
3. Why is it so important for someone with depression to get help? What might happen if they don't get the help they need?
4. People who are depressed tend to withdraw from others. Why do you think this happens? How does this affect their depression?

Activities for Students

Note: The following activities are written in language appropriate for sharing with your students.

Recognizing Depression

Objectives:

Students will:

- Recognize the signs of depression
- Determine the causes of someone's depression
- Recommend strategies to help someone who is depressed

Materials:

- Computer with Internet access
- "Recognizing Depression" handout, pen or pencil

Class Time:

1 hour

Activity:

Take some time to think about how depression is portrayed around you. Select a character from a book, short story, TV show, or movie who you think is depressed, and use the "Recognizing Depression" handout to examine how his or her depression is depicted. Using the KidsHealth.org articles, identify the signs and symptoms of this character's depression. What does the character do that makes you think he or she is depressed? Does this person even realize he or she is depressed? Next list the cause of this character's depression. Did certain events lead up to it? Finally, discuss how the character is handling his or her depression. Develop a list of ways that a friend could support this character, as well as what kinds of help might be available.

Depression Factsheet for Students

Objectives:

Students will:

- Learn what depression is and why it occurs
- Identify signs and symptoms of depression
- Determine strategies to overcome depression

Materials:

- Computer with Internet access
- "Depression Factsheet for Students" handout, pen or pencil

Class Time:

1 hour

Activity:

Today we're going to create a resource for students that helps explain depression. First, we'll read the KidsHealth.org articles related to depression, then we'll fill out the "Depression Factsheet for Students" handout. After reading the factsheet, students should know what to do if they or a classmate or friend is feeling depressed.

Extensions:

1. Redesign the Depression Factsheet for Students into a poster for school hallways or the school nurses office.
2. Role-play a conversation with a classmate in which you talk to a or other trusted adult about your feelings and ask for help with this hypothetical situation: For the last few weeks you've been feeling more than sad. You're tired all the time, want to sleep a lot more than usual, and just don't feel like doing anything. As a result, your grades are starting to slip. Your friends, teachers, and family members are even starting to notice changes in you.
