

Today's Artist: Francisco "Frank" Matas

Frank Matas is an artist and art teacher from the suburbs of Chicago. His family is from Guatemala. Growing up he felt like he was between two worlds. His skin was lighter colored and the Spanish speaking kids told him he looked too white, and the white kids told him he was too dark. When he was older he visited Guatemala and he felt very at home at the Mayan temples. A lot of Mayan culture is about being between a Heaven life realm and a Hell like realm. He started making art about those Mayan ideas and feeling lost between worlds.

Today's Artist: Francisco "Frank" Matas

Frank Matas is an artist and art teacher from the suburbs of Chicago. His family is from Guatemala. Growing up he felt like he was between two worlds. His skin was lighter colored and the Spanish speaking kids told him he looked too white, and the white kids told him he was too dark. When he was older he visited Guatemala and he felt very at home at the Mayan temples. A lot of Mayan culture is about being between a Heaven life realm and a Hell like realm. He started making art about those Mayan ideas and feeling lost between worlds.

Today's Artist: Francisco "Frank" Matas

Frank Matas is an artist and art teacher from the suburbs of Chicago. His family is from Guatemala. Growing up he felt like he was between two worlds. His skin was lighter colored and the Spanish speaking kids told him he looked too white, and the white kids told him he was too dark. When he was older he visited Guatemala and he felt very at home at the Mayan temples. A lot of Mayan culture is about being between a Heaven life realm and a Hell like realm. He started making art about those Mayan ideas and feeling lost between worlds.

Today's Artist: Francisco "Frank" Matas

Frank Matas is an artist and art teacher from the suburbs of Chicago. His family is from Guatemala. Growing up he felt like he was between two worlds. His skin was lighter colored and the Spanish speaking kids told him he looked too white, and the white kids told him he was too dark. When he was older he visited Guatemala and he felt very at home at the Mayan temples. A lot of Mayan culture is about being between a Heaven life realm and a Hell like realm. He started making art about those Mayan ideas and feeling lost between worlds.

Today's Artist: Francisco "Frank" Matas

Frank Matas is an artist and art teacher from the suburbs of Chicago. His family is from Guatemala. Growing up he felt like he was between two worlds. His skin was lighter colored and the Spanish speaking kids told him he looked too white, and the white kids told him he was too dark. When he was older he visited Guatemala and he felt very at home at the Mayan temples. A lot of Mayan culture is about being between a Heaven life realm and a Hell like realm. He started making art about those Mayan ideas and feeling lost between worlds.

Today's Artist: Francisco "Frank" Matas

Frank Matas is an artist and art teacher from the suburbs of Chicago. His family is from Guatemala. Growing up he felt like he was between two worlds. His skin was lighter colored and the Spanish speaking kids told him he looked too white, and the white kids told him he was too dark.

When he was older he visited Guatemala and he felt very at home at the Mayan temples. A lot of Mayan culture is about being between a Heaven life realm and a Hell like realm. He started making art about those Mayan ideas and feeling lost between worlds.

Today's Artist: Francisco "Frank" Matas

Frank Matas is an artist and art teacher from the suburbs of Chicago. His family is from Guatemala. Growing up he felt like he was between two worlds. His skin was lighter colored and the Spanish speaking kids told him he looked too white, and the white kids told him he was too dark. When he was older he visited Guatemala and he felt very at home at the Mayan temples. A lot of Mayan culture is about being between a Heaven life realm and a Hell like realm. He started making art about those Mayan ideas and feeling lost between worlds.

Today's Artist: Francisco "Frank" Matas

Frank Matas is an artist and art teacher from the suburbs of Chicago. His family is from Guatemala. Growing up he felt like he was between two worlds.

His skin was lighter colored and the Spanish speaking kids told him he looked too white, and the white kids told him he was too dark. When he was older he visited Guatemala and he felt very at home at the Mayan temples. A lot of Mayan culture is about being between a Heaven life realm and a Hell like realm. He started making art about those Mayan ideas and feeling lost between worlds.

Today's Artist: Francisco "Frank" Matas

Frank Matas is an artist and art teacher from the suburbs of Chicago. His family is from Guatemala. Growing up he felt like he was between two worlds.

His skin was lighter colored and the Spanish speaking kids told him he looked too white, and the white kids told him he was too dark. When he was older he visited Guatemala and he felt very at home at the Mayan temples. A lot of Mayan culture is about being between a Heaven life realm and a Hell like realm. He started making art about those Mayan ideas and feeling lost between worlds.

Today's Artist: Francisco "Frank" Matas

Frank Matas is an artist and art teacher from the suburbs of Chicago. His family is from Guatemala. Growing up he felt like he was between two worlds. His skin was lighter colored and the Spanish speaking kids told him he looked too white, and the white kids told him he was too dark.

When he was older he visited Guatemala and he felt very at home at the Mayan temples. A lot of Mayan culture is about being between a Heaven life realm and a Hell like realm. He started making art about those Mayan ideas and feeling lost between worlds.

Today's Artist: Francisco "Frank" Matas

Frank Matas is an artist and art teacher from the suburbs of Chicago. His family is from Guatemala. Growing up he felt like he was between two worlds. His skin was lighter colored and the Spanish speaking kids told him he looked too white, and the white kids told him he was too dark. When he was older he visited Guatemala and he felt very at home at the Mayan temples. A lot of Mayan culture is about being between a Heaven life realm and a Hell like realm. He started making art about those Mayan ideas and feeling lost between worlds.

Today's Artist: Francisco "Frank" Matas

Frank Matas is an artist and art teacher from the suburbs of Chicago. His family is from Guatemala. Growing up he felt like he was between two worlds. His skin was lighter colored and the Spanish speaking kids told him he looked too white, and the white kids told him he was too dark. When he was older he visited Guatemala and he felt very at home at the Mayan temples. A lot of Mayan culture is about being between a Heaven life realm and a Hell like realm. He started making art about those Mayan ideas and feeling lost between worlds.

Today's Artist: Francisco "Frank" Matas

Frank Matas is an artist and art teacher from the suburbs of Chicago. His family is from Guatemala. Growing up he felt like he was between two worlds. His skin was lighter colored and the Spanish speaking kids told him he looked too white, and the white kids told him he was too dark. When he was older he visited Guatemala and he felt very at home at the Mayan temples. A lot of Mayan culture is about being between a Heaven life realm and a Hell like realm. He started making art about those Mayan ideas and feeling lost between worlds.

Today's Artist: Francisco "Frank" Matas

Frank Matas is an artist and art teacher from the suburbs of Chicago. His family is from Guatemala. Growing up he felt like he was between two worlds. His skin was lighter colored and the Spanish speaking kids told him he looked too white, and the white kids told him he was too dark. When he was older he visited Guatemala and he felt very at home at the Mayan temples. A lot of Mayan culture is about being between a Heaven life realm and a Hell like realm. He started making art about those Mayan ideas and feeling lost between worlds.

