

1. “The camp looked as though it had been through an epidemic: empty and dead” (47).
2. “I nodded, once, ten times, endlessly. As if my head had decided to say yes for all eternity” (58).
3. “Two lambs with hundreds of wolves lying in wait for them. Two lambs without a shepard, free for the taking” (59).
4. “One day, as we returned from work, we saw three gallows, three black ravens, erected on the Appelplatz” (64).
5. “That night, the soup tasted of corpses” (65).

6. "Night was falling rapidly. And more and more prisoners kept coming, from every block, suddenly able to overcome time and space, to will both into submission" (66).
7. "His eyes would suddenly go blank, leaving two gaping wounds, two wells of terror" (76).
8. "These words, coming from the grave, as it were, a faceless shape, filled me with terror" (78).
9. "It wasn't the first time false prophets announced to us: peace-in-the-world, the-Red-Cross-negotiating-our-liberation, or other fables...And often we believed them...It was like an injection of morphine" (80).
10. "At six o'clock the bell rang. The death knell. The funeral. The procession was about to begin its march" (84).