General

What it looks like:

Student participates in a general education PE setting, with general education peers, follow a general education curriculum, and a general education teacher. Student receives a grade from general education teacher. LRE may include support staff within GPE setting.

Examples:

Student attends GPE independently

Student attends GPE with staff support

Specially Designed

This is the grey area between general education and special education and determining placement can be difficult at times. According to IDEA: Specially designed PE is adapting, as appropriate to a student's need, the content, methodology, or delivery of instruction to address student's unique needs resulting from his/her disability and ensure student's access to general curriculum. (34 C.F.R. 300.39(b)(3))

Adapted or modified content: knowledge and skills being taught to student are different from what is being taught to typical same-aged peers.

Adapted or modified methodology: different instructional approaches are used to teach content to student(s) than are used for typical same-aged peers.

Adapted or modified delivery: the way in which instruction is given to the student(s) is different than those given to typical same-aged peers.

We check this placement IF:

- Adaptions to content, methodology, or delivery are made
- It is a necessary, rather than beneficial, placement for student
- Designed OR implemented by APE specialist: AND
- Full inclusion of general education not appropriate for student(s)

Some examples of what this could look like:

- Student participates in movement activities lead by classroom teacher and/or APE teacher.
- Student participates in a special curriculum lead by the GPE teacher where no gen ed students are present (in collaboration with APE teacher)
- APE specialist provides collaborative/consultation services to student(s) physical activity, regardless of an APE goal.
- APE specialist leads a comprehensive PE class for students that meets their educational needs away from general education peers.
