

GRAMMARMAN: With his incredible grasp of the English language, and his detailed diagraming abilities, can he solve the crime????

VERNON VERB: Maybe

being in every sentence wasn't good enough for him.

Maybe he didn't like

sharing the spotlight with all those nouns???

HENRIETTA HELPING VERB:

She's the adoring wife.

Maybe she wanted to help her husband out one last time and remove his competition for him once and for all!!!

LINK

VERB: She may hold things together, but she's so small that lots of people forget about her. Bet it makes her mad sometimes.

ANDY ADJECTIVE: He'd be out of a job without nouns to describe. So he's probably not a good suspect.

ADRIAN ADVERB: She wouldn't do anything to harm Andy, so she's out as a suspect, too.

WORD WONDER: He's busy holding down two jobs. Will he still be able to help our brave Grammar man solve the crime?

PREPPY SITION: He may be little, but he has no trouble locating himself anywhere in time and space. Could he have erased Nate Noun?

CONNIE JUNCTION: She

may be the glue
that holds sentence
parts
together,
but was
she stuck
in a rut?

And with Nate Noun out of the way, would she be more important?

ART ICKLE: He may be A little word, but he's frequent. With Nate Noun out of THE way, would he be more important? Is he A murderer?

QUINTOUS QUOTATION

MARK:

He's not even a word.

Witnesses heard him say, "I'm tired of people forgetting all about us."

NATHANIEL NOUN: The

victim. The dead guy.

Maybe they all found him tedious to have around.

Maybe they were tired of his gossip about people, places, and things!

QUEENY QUOTATION

MARK:
Maybe she's tired of people forgetting all about her and her husband. Did she help rub out Nate Noun just for spite?

POLLY PRONOUN: Is she the murderer? Was she tired of doing a lot of the work without any recognition?

"Yes, Mr.

Noun." "No, Mr. Noun."

"Anything you say, Mr. Noun."

ALEX APOSTROPHE: He's so possessive, and he's not even a word. Maybe he caught Nate Noun talking about his special person...Quella?

QUELLA QUESTIONMARK: Has she asked enough questions? Does she know the answer to this mystery? Why can't she give us the answer?

EMMA EXCLAMATION POINT: People forget about her all the time because she's not even a word. Maybe she let her emotions get away with her!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

IZZY INTERJECTION: She was never even nominated for a Grammy, but she's always popping up in the strangest places. It's hard to pin her down. Maybe she decided to help out her Emma?

INDY CLAUSE: Is she the murderer?

Without nouns, could she win back her third husband's affections?

DEPPEN CLAUSE: He can't even stand up on his own two feet. Could he have deleted the gossiping Nate Noun to save his marriage?

PHYLLIS PHRASE: Could a dizzy fragment have it in her to erase Nate Noun? Can she exist without nouns?

PAPARAZZI: Will they ever know enough to leave the world's Grammar Stars alone? Certainly not on Grammy Night when the world's Best Punctuation Marks and Best Parts of Speech receive their Grammy Awards.
