The moral of this lesson
is to be what you can be.

Dare to dream,
and listen to your talents
to find what you will be.

I'd like to be a happy clown
and make everyone laugh.

I'd wear big clothes,
and a bright red nose,
and be pleased with all I have.

I'd like to be an athlete,
and play basketball each day.

I'd leap so high
I could touch the sky,
and make baskets along the way.

I'd like to be a musician
and play songs every day.

I would play the trumpet,
or guitar and strum it,
making music my own way.

I'd like to be a zookeeper
and care for birds and snakes.

I'd give them food,
and watch their moods,
and on birthdays give them cakes.

I'd like to be a gardener
and grow healthy things to eat.

I'd plant my seeds,
water them, and pull weeds.

My garden would be hard to beat.

I'd like to be a mermaid
and swim in the deep blue sea.

The fish and whales
could tell their tales,
while dolphins sang to me.

I'd like to be an astronaut
and fly up to the moon.

In outer space,
I'd find a place
to eat without a spoon.

I'd like to be a pirate.

I would have to be brave and bold.

I would sail with a crew
on oceans of blue
to look for treasure and gold.

I'd like to be a cowboy
and ride horses every day.

And then at night,
I would tie them tight
and feed them lots of hay.

I'd like to be a dancer
and twirl and jump and fly.

I'd wear fluffy skirts
and fancy shirts.

People would clap as I danced by.

I'd like to be an artist
and try to paint the land.

I would paint the water blue
and the great skies, too.

The ground would be the color
of sand.
