You and your coworkers run a small startup company racing to launch the next great app. You've worked for years on your idea and created everything from the ground up. Today is launch day but there's a problem...

You were so worried about your competitors stealing your idea that you didn't store it in the cloud - you locked it up - old school. In your pure exhaustion and caffeine clouded judgement you locked it away with multiple locks. But now you can't remember the combinations. Thankfully, you left yourself (and your coworkers) clues to help you get your app launched on time. You'll need all that business knowledge...

You have 30 minutes to beat your competition to the product launch. Good luck.

The first clue has been left for you where you leave all your work each day to get graded by the boss.
