Wayne State University Choir Harmonizes with Redford Union High School Students

In a blend of harmonies and shared passion, the choir team from Wayne State University – led by Dr. Brandon Waddles – recently joined Redford Union High School’s choir team for a day of singing and mentorship. The collaboration between the two groups not only enriched the high school students' experiences but also marked the beginning of a beautiful tradition.

Students were eager to have the opportunity to sing alongside their older peers . Throughout WSU's visit, the high school students were immersed in a whirlwind of learning and collaboration. Students had the opportunity to learn new techniques and refine their skills under the guidance of the University choir team. From mastering challenging vocal techniques to fine-tuning harmonies, every moment was a chance for growth and discovery.

Beyond technical aspects, the two groups grew close and found common ground as they began practicing. Despite being the first meeting, the groups quickly bonded over their shared love for music. Looking towards the future, both the WSU choir team and the students of RUHS hope to continue this tradition of musical collaboration through an ongoing partnership between the two groups.

In the end, this was more than just a musical event—it was a celebration of unity, creativity, and the transformative power of music.
