Talk about it

Bring the darkness into the light.

Discuss with your students what they fear and how it affects them. Discuss whether they have adults in their lives that they can talk to about what they see online or on television. Give names to that unknown darkness they're feeling. Show them that they aren't feeling their fears in isolation, but that they're part of a large number of others.

Stop the feeling of helplessness.

There are many projects that students can undertake to feel more empowered, such as writing letters of support to victims all over the world, or writing about what they feel to politicians and other leaders.

Start a fundraising project.

Raise money to send to the victims of violence or terrorism that will help them make the difficult transition to normalcy.

Demonstrate solidarity.

Organize your students to create a vigil for showing solidarity with the victims of violence or terrorism. Post pictures of the event online.

Communicate support.

Become "pen pals" with victims using social media to offer a friendly listening ear and an ongoing voice of encouragement.
